PREFACE

The text of this edition of Coriolanus is based on a collation of the seventeenth century Folios, the Globe edition, the Cambridge (W. A. Wright) edition of 1891, and that of Delius (1882). As compared with the text of the earlier editions of Hudson's Shakespeare, it is conservative. Exclusive of changes in spelling, punctuation, and stage directions, very few emendations by eighteenth century and nineteenth century editors have been adopted; and these, with the more important variations from the First Folio, are indicated in the textual notes. These notes are printed immediately below the text, so that a reader or student may see at a glance the evidence in the case of a disputed reading, and have some definite understanding of the reasons for those differences in the text of Shakespeare which frequently surprise and very often annoy. Such an arrangement should be of special help in the case of plays universally read and frequently acted, as actors and interpreters seldom agree in adhering to one text. A consideration of the more poetical, or the more dramatically effective, of two variant readings will often lead to rich results in awakening a spirit of discriminating interpretation and in developing true creative criticism. In no sense is this a textual variorum edition. The variants given are only those of importance and high authority.

The spelling and the punctuation of the text are modern, except in the case of verb terminations in -ed, which, when the e is silent, are printed with the apostrophe in its place. This is the general usage in the First Folio. The important contractions in the First Folio which may indicate Elizabethan pronunciation ('i th' for 'in the,' 'pamp'red' for 'pamper'd,' for example) are also followed. Modern spelling has to a certain extent been adopted in the text variants, but the original spelling has been retained wherever its peculiarities have been the basis for important textual criticism and emendation.

With the exception of the position of the textual variants, the plan of this edition is similar to that of the old Hudson Shakespeare. It is impossible to specify the various instances of revision and rearrangement in the matter of the Introduction and the interpretative notes, but the endeavor has been to retain all that gave the old edition its unique place and to add the results of what seems vital and permanent in later inquiry and research. In this edition, as in the volumes of the series already published, the chapters entitled Sources, Date of Composition, Early Editions, Versification and Diction, Duration of Time, Dramatic Construction and Development with Analysis by Act and Scene, and Stage History are wholly new. In this edition, too, is introduced a chronological chart, covering the important events of Shakespeare's life as man and as author and indicating in parallel columns his relation to contemporary writers and events. As a guide to reading clubs and literary societies, there has been appended to the Introduction a table of the distribution of characters in the play, giving the acts and scenes in which each character appears and the number of lines spoken by each. The index of words and phrases has been so arranged as to serve both as a glossary and as a guide to the more important grammatical differences between Elizabethan and modern English.

While it is important that the principle of suum cuique be attended to so far as is possible in matters of research and scholarship, it is becoming more and more difficult to give every man his own in Shakespearian annotation. The amount of material accumulated is so great that the identity-origin of much important comment and suggestion is either wholly lost or so crushed out of shape as to be beyond recognition. Instructive significance perhaps attaches to this in editing the works of one who quietly made so much of materials gathered by others. But the list of authorities given on page xlv will indicate the chief source of much that has gone to enrich the value of this edition. Especial acknowledgment is here made of the obligations to Dr. William Aldis Wright and Dr. Horace Howard Furness, whose work in the collation of Quartos, Folios, and the more important English and American editions of Shakespeare has been of so great value to all subsequent editors and investigators.

With regard to the general plan of this revision of Hudson's Shakespeare, Professor W. P. Trent, of Columbia University, has offered valuable suggestions and given important advice. In the case of Coriolanus particular acknowledgment is due to Dr. Francis Kingsley Ball. To his critical acumen and literary sagacity are due the explanations connected with I, iv, 31-32 and II, iii, 233-240.

INTRODUCTION

NOTE. In citations from Shakespeare's plays and nondramatic poems the numbering has reference to the Globe edition, except in the case of this play, where the reference is to this edition.

I. SOURCES

Modern criticism has swept away many of the dim heroic traditions of old Rome, and the story of Coriolanus has come to be regarded not as historic fact but as one of the most beautiful of early Roman legends. With questions of historical accuracy and fidelity to fact Shakespeare was not concerned. He was content to take the vivid, graphic narratives of Plutarch as authentic history. And he would have been justified in doing this, even if the later results of scholarly criticism and research had been at his command; for his business as an artist was to set forth a free and life-like portraiture of human character as modified by the old Roman nationality, and clothed with the drapery of the early Roman manners.

THE MAIN STORY

North's Plutarch. It is beyond doubt that in Coriolanus Shakespeare derived the great body of his historical material from The Life of Caius Martius Coriolanus in Sir Thomas North's translation of Plutarch.¹ This work was first printed in 1579 in a massive folio dedicated to Queen Elizabeth. The title-page is given in facsimile as the frontispiece of this volume. A second edition appeared in 1595, and in all probability this was the edition read by Shakespeare. Its interesting title-page, reproduced in facsimile on page xiii, gives in brief the literary history of North's translation, which was made not directly from the original Greek of Plutarch, but from a French version by Jacques Amyot, bishop of Auxerre, the title-page of which is shown in facsimile on page xiv.¹ In 1603 appeared a third edition with additional Lives and new matter on the title-page. There were subsequent editions in 1612,² 1631, 1656, and 1676. The popularity of this work attested by these reprintings was thoroughly deserved, for North's Plutarch is among the richest and freshest monuments of Elizabethan prose literature, and, apart altogether from the use made of it by Shakespeare, is in itself an invaluable repertory of honest, manly, idiomatic English. All the more important passages drawn upon for the play are quoted in the footnotes to the text of this edition of Coriolanus. These will show that in most of the leading incidents the great Greek biographer is closely followed, though in many cases the incidents are worked out and developed with rare fertility of invention and art. In many places the Plutarchian form and order of thought, and also the very words of North's racy and delectable English, are retained, with such an embalming for immortality as

² There is a famous copy of this edition in the Greenock Library with the initials "W. S." at the top of the title-page and seventeenth century manuscript notes and markings in the text. See Skeat's Shakespeare's Plutarch, Introduction, pages xii-xiii.

TITLE-PAGE OF AMYOT'S PLUTARQUE

Shakespeare alone could give. In addition to the many examples furnished in the notes, the following passages show the almost identical phrasing of Plutarch's prose and Shakespeare's verse. In Plutarch Coriolanus is described thus by one of his generals :

For he was even such another, as Cato would have a soldier and a captain to be, not only terrible and fierce to lay about him, but to make the enemy afraid with the sound of his voice, and grimness of his countenance.

With this compare :

Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes ; but, with thy grim looks and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. [I, iv, 56-61]

In Coriolanus Shakespeare's indebtedness to North's Plutarch may be summed up as extending to : (1) the general story of the play ; (2) minor incidents and happenings, as the market-place incident (II, iii) in which Coriolanus displays his wounds to the populace ; (3) descriptive detail, as in the description of the relationship existing between Coriolanus and his mother (I, iii, 1-35) ; and (4) reproduction of many passages almost word for word, including some of the finest speeches, as in the scene where Coriolanus in exile confronts Aufidius (IV, v).

On the other hand, Shakespeare's alteration of Plutarchian material is along the lines of (1) injection of picturesque and humorous details, as in the interruptions and rejoinders in the " pretty tale " of Menenius (I, i, 82-150) ; (2) effective portraiture both of the principal characters and of the less important Menenius, Aufidius, Virgilia, and the tribunes, and (3) simplification and compression of the action for dramatic effect, as in condensing the three popular uprisings into one.

II. DATE OF COMPOSITION

Modern editors fix the date of composition of Coriolanus within 1608–1610, the later time limit (terminus ante quem), and 1598, the earlier time limit (terminus post quem). The weight of evidence is in favor of 1608–1610.

EXTERNAL EVIDENCE

Research has found no conclusive evidence of a positive kind as to the date of composition. The negative evidence involved in the fact that Coriolanus is not mentioned by Francis Meres in the *Palladis Tamia*¹ does no more than establish 1598 as a probable terminus post quem.

INTERNAL EVIDENCE

1. Allusions within the Play. Though Coriolanus contains no unmistakable allusions to contemporary events or persons, investigators have based theories as to date of composition on certain passages within the play. The fable of the belly (I, i, 91–150) may be cited as bearing upon this question. While Shakespeare found this tale in North's Plutarch and has in general followed it as there given, Malone points out that "the same tale is also told of [Pope] Adrian the Fourth by Camden, in his Remaines, p. 199, under the head of Wise Speeches, with more particularity; and one or two of the expressions, as well as the enumeration of the functions performed by each of the members of the body, appear to have been taken from that book." Camden's Remaines concerning Britain was published in 1605, and quickly passed through seven editions. The following italicized passages in a quotation from Camden, given by Malone, show the points in which Shakespeare, whether or not intentionally, departs from Plutarch's version and follows that of Camden:

All the members of the body conspired against the stomacke, as against the swallowing *gulf*e of all their labours; for whereas the eies beheld, the eares heard, the handes laboured, the feete travelled, the tongue spake, and all partes performed their function, onely the stomacke lay ydle and consumed all. Hereupon they ioyntly agreed al to forbear their labours, and to pine away their lasie and publike enemy. One day passed over, the second followed very tedious, but the third day was so grievous to them all, that they called a common Counsel; The eyes waxed dimme, the feete could not support the body, the armes waxed lasie, the tongue faltered, and could not lay open the matter; Therefore they all with one accord desired the advise of the Heart. There Reason layd open before them, etc.

These resemblances to Camden, although regarded by some editors as proof that Coriolanus was not written until after 1605, are insignificant in comparison with the close adherence to Plutarch's narrative:

All the members of a man's body did rebel against the belly, complaining of it, that it only remained in the midst of the body without doing any thing, neither did bear any labour to the maintenance of the rest: whereas all other parts and members did labour painfully, and were very careful, to satisfy the appetites and desires of the body. And so the belly, all this notwithstanding, laughed at their folly, and said: It is true, I first receive all meates that nourish man's body: but afterwards I send it again to the nourishment of other parts of the same. . . . For matters being well digested, and their counsels throughly examined, touching the benefit of the commonwealth, the Senators are cause of the common commodity that cometh unto every one of you.

The assertion that Coriolanus must have been written earlier than 1609 is based chiefly on the likeness of the passage in Jonson's The Silent Woman, "Well, Dauphine, you have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland" to that in Coriolanus, II, ii, 98, "He lurch'd all swords of the garland." Jonson's play appeared in 1609.

2. Qualities of Style and Diction. The internal evidence of style, the skillful weaving of tragic complication, ethical suggestion, and political sagacity, the quality of the prose and blank verse (see below, Versification and Diction), the energy of the characterization, the close resemblance of workmanship to that of Antony and Cleopatra, which most editors agree was composed shortly before its entry in The Stationers' Registers, on May 20, 1608,—all point to the period of 1608–1610 as the probable date of composition.

It has been said that a true taste for Shakespeare is like the creation of a special sense; and this saying is nowhere better approved than in reference to his subtile variations of language and style. He began with what may be described as a preponderance of the poetic element over the dramatic. His development shows a gradual rising of the dramatic and ethical interest into strength and prominence. Where positive external evidence is lacking the probable date of composition may be argued from the relative strength of poetic, dramatic, and ethical elements. In Coriolanus we find such unity of action, severity of style, compactness of structure, and limiting of humorous by-play, as characterize the workmanship of his great tragic period, ushered in by Julius Cæsar and concluded by Antony and Cleopatra and Coriolanus. Verse and diction tests,¹ the proportion of prose and verse and of rhymed and unrhymed lines in the regular dialogue, the number of feminine endings, light endings, weak endings, run-on lines, short lines, etc. (see below, Versification and Diction), strengthen the case for the date of composition suggested by the other evidence.

III. EARLY EDITIONS

FOLIOS

On November 8, 1623, Edward Blount and Isaac Jaggard obtained formal license to print "Mr. William Shakespeeres Comedyes, Histories, and Tragedyes, soe manie of the said copenes as are not formerly entred to other men." This is the description-entry in The Stationers' Registers of what is now known as the First Folio (1623), designated in the textual notes of this edition F₁. Coriolanus is one of the plays "not formerly entred,"² and it was first printed, so far as is known, in this famous volume. Here it originally appeared first among the tragedies and was followed by Titus Andronicus; but later Troilus and Cressida, for some reason omitted from its proper place after Romeo and Juliet, was placed before it. The text of Coriolanus in the First Folio is frequently difficult and obscure, "due probably," the Cambridge editors point out, "to the carelessness or the illegibility of the manuscript from which it was printed." This text, with the necessary emendations indicated in the textual notes and elsewhere, is the basis of the text of this edition of the play.

¹ An excellent summary of these tests will be found in Dowden's Shakspeare Primer, pages 39-46. See also Ward's History of English Dramatic Literature, Vol. II, pages 47-51.

² This is strong evidence that the play had not been printed at an earlier date.

The Second Folio, F₂ (1632), the Third Folio, F₃ (1663, 1664), and the Fourth Folio, F₄ (1685), show few variants in the text of Coriolanus and none of importance.

ROWE'S EDITIONS

In the Folios the play is divided into acts, but not into scenes, though the first act is headed Actus Primus, Scæna Prima. The first systematic division into scenes was made by Nicholas Rowe, poet laureate to George I, in the edition which he issued in six octavo volumes in 1709. In this edition Rowe, an experienced playwright, marked the entrances and exits of the characters and introduced many stage directions. He also introduced the list of dramatis personæ which has been the basis for all later lists. A second edition in eight volumes was published in 1714. Rowe followed very closely the text of the Fourth Folio, but modernized spelling, punctuation, and occasionally grammar. These are the first critical editions of Shakespeare's plays.

IV. VERSIFICATION AND DICTION

BLANK VERSE

Coriolanus is one of the seven longest plays in the Shakespeare canon, and of its total of 3392 lines 2521 are in blank verse¹—the unrhymed, iambic five-stress (decasyllabic) verse,

¹ The term 'blank verse' was just coming into use in Shakespeare's day. It seems to have been used for the first time in literature in or iambic pentameter, introduced into England from Italy by Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, about 1540, and used by him in a translation of the second and fourth books of the Æneid. Nicholas Grimald (Tottel's Miscellany, 1557) employed the measure for the first time in English original poetry, and its roots began to strike deep into British soil and absorb substance. It is peculiarly significant that Sackville and Norton should have used it as the measure of Gorboduc, the first English tragedy (performed by "the Gentlemen of the Inner Temple" on January 18, 1561, and first printed in 1565). About the time when Shakespeare arrived in London the infinite possibilities of blank verse as a vehicle for dramatic poetry and passion were being shown by Kyd, and above all by Marlowe. Blank verse as used by Shakespeare is really an epitome of the development of the measure in connection with the English drama. In his earlier plays the blank verse is often similar to that of Gorboduc. The tendency is to adhere to the syllable-counting principle, to make the line the unit, the sentence and phrase coinciding with the line (end-stopped verse), and to use five perfect iambic feet to the line. In plays of the middle period, such as The Merchant of Venice, Much Ado About Nothing, As You Like It, written between 1596 and 1600, the blank verse is more like that of Kyd and Marlowe, with less monotonous regularity in the structure and an increasing tendency to carry on the sense from one line to another without a syntactical or rhetorical pause at the end of the line (run-on verse, enjambement). Redundant syllables now abound, and the melody is richer and fuller. In Shakespeare's later plays, to which Coriolanus belongs, the blank verse breaks away from bondage to formal line limits, and sweeps all along with it in freedom, power, and organic unity.

Nash's Preface to Greene's Menaphon, where we find the expression, "the swelling bumbast of bragging blanke verse." Shakespeare uses the expression three times, always humorously or satirically.

The verse of Coriolanus shows perfect freedom from the monotonous regularity of the earlier plays; it is flexible and varied, musical and sonorous, and has the superb movement of the verse in King Lear, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest. End-stopped, normally regular iambic pentameter lines occur, but run-on verse predominates. Only Cymbeline and King Henry the Eighth show a larger proportion of such verse. There are 710 feminine endings (only six plays having a larger proportion), 60 light endings,¹ and 44 weak endings. "The light endings and weak endings, scanty in all the previous plays (the largest number being 21 of the former, and 2 of the latter in Macbeth), reach the number of 71 and 28 respectively, in Antony; 60 and 44 in Coriolanus; 78 and 52 in Cymbeline; 42 and 25 in The Tempest; 57 and 43 in The Winter's Tale." — Gollancz.

ALEXANDRINES

While French prosodists apply the term 'Alexandrine' only to a twelve-syllable line with the pause after the sixth syllable, it is generally used in English to designate iambic six-stress verse, or iambic hexameter, of which we have examples in I, i, 199; I, iv, 6; I, x, 17. This was a favorite

¹ Light endings, as defined by Ingram, are such words as am, can, do, has, I, thou, etc., on which "the voice can to a certain small extent dwell"; weak endings are words like and, for, from, if, in, of, or, which "are so essentially proclitic . . . that we are forced to run them, in pronunciation no less than in sense, into the closest connection with the opening words of the succeeding line."

Elizabethan measure, and it was common in moral plays and the earlier heroic drama. English literature has no finer examples of this verse than the last line of each stanza of The Faerie Queene. In Coriolanus are 41 Alexandrines.

RHYME

Apart from the use of rhyme in songs, lyrics, and portions of masques (as in The Tempest, IV, i, 60-138), a progress from more to less rhyme is a sure index to Shakespeare's development as a dramatist and a master of expression. In the early Love's Labour's Lost are more than 1000 rhyming five-stress iambic lines; in Julius Cæsar only 34; in The Tempest only 2; in The Winter's Tale not one. In Coriolanus, as in all the later plays, rhyme is used sparingly, there being in all only 13 rhyming couplets. Here it is used chiefly for the following purposes: (1) to mark the close of speeches and scenes, as in II, i, 151-152; IV, vii, 56-57; (2) to point an epigram or a maxim, as in IV, vii, 54-55; (3) to aid in expressing strong emotion, as in II, iii, 107-119, where Coriolanus gives way to his pent-up feelings in the longest rhymed passage in the play.

PROSE

In the development of the English drama the use of prose as a vehicle of expression entitled to equal rights with verse was due to Lyly. He was the first to use prose with power and distinction in original plays and did memorable service in preparing the way for Shakespeare's achievement. Interesting attempts have been made to explain Shakespeare's distinctive use of verse and prose; and of recent years there has been much discussion of the question "whether we are justified in supposing that Shakespeare was guided by any fixed principle in his employment of verse and prose, or whether he merely employed them, as fancy suggested, for the sake of variety and relief.”¹ It is a significant fact that in many of his earlier plays there is little or no prose, and that the proportion of prose to blank verse increases with the decrease of rhyme. In the later plays five kinds of prose may be distinguished: (1) the prose of formal documents, as in letters and proclamations. (2) The prose of ‘low life,’ including the speech of comic characters, as in many of the scenes in which Menenius appears. This is a development of the humorous prose found, for example, in Greene’s comedies that deal with humble life. (3) The colloquial prose of simple dialogue, as in the conversation between Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria (I, iii). In these passages, the prose diction gives temporary emotional relief and prepares for the heightening of the dramatic pitch in the scenes which immediately follow. But note that this scene changes to blank verse when Volumnia becomes excited. (4) The prose of abnormal mentality. (5) The essentially euphuistic prose. Of this there are few examples in Coriolanus, but in II, iii, where Coriolanus speaks now in verse and now in prose, his longest prose speech (lines 90–98) might be termed euphuistic. For the most part the prose of the play is that of homely dialogue and of serious information.

V. DURATION OF TIME

1. Historic Time. A period of about four years is covered by the events of the play. The secession to the Mons Sacer, in the year of Rome, A.U.C. 262, opens the play, and the death of Coriolanus, A.U.C. 266, marks its close. The capture of Corioli ('Corioles' as Shakespeare wrote it, following North's Plutarch, and as it is always given in the text, stage directions, etc., of this edition of the play) is now reckoned to the year 493 B.C.

2. Dramatic Time. "The historical drama," says Bulwer-Lytton, "is the concentration of historical events." In Coriolanus the happenings of four years are represented as the occurrences of eleven days with intervals, distributed over the acts and scenes as follows:¹

Day 1. — I, i.

VI. DRAMATIC CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Coriolanus is a tragedy of the more extreme Shakespearian type, in which is represented a conflict between an individual, or group of individuals, and certain forces which environ, antagonize, and overwhelm. The interest centers in the personality of Coriolanus, and upon him depends the dramatic unity. In this play, as in all Shakespearian tragedy, five stages may be noted in the plot development: (1) the exposition, or introduction; (2) the complication, rising action, or growth; (3) the climax, crisis, or turning point; (4) the resolution, falling action, or consequence; and (5) the dénouement, catastrophe,¹ or conclusion. Let it not be thought for a moment that each of these stages is clearly differentiated. As a rule they pass insensibly into each other, as they do in life.

ANALYSIS BY ACT AND SCENE²

I. THE EXPOSITION, OR INTRODUCTION (TYING OF THE KNOT)

Act I, Scene i. The first three scenes form an introduction to the play as a whole. Coriolanus is a tragedy of a human soul, and it is necessary to its success that the central figure be at first pictured with the light full on his strong features, and the defects untouched or barely suggested. The keynote of the struggle is sounded even in the opening lines, when one of the rabble says to his companions, "First, you know Caius Martius is chief enemy to the people" (line 7).

² "It must be understood that a play can be analyzed into very different schemes of plot. It must not be thought that one of these schemes is right and the rest wrong; but the schemes will be better or worse in proportion as — while of course representing correctly the facts of the play — they bring out more or less of what ministers to our sense of design." — Moulton.

It is this assumption on the part, first of the common people, and later of the senators, that enmity exists between them and Coriolanus that makes inevitable the continuous misunderstanding and final disaster. The first scene foreshadows not only the supreme struggle between Coriolanus and his fate but the lesser although historically more significant struggle between the rulers and the ruled. Only conflict and tragedy can come from the personal material presented here. Coriolanus is not made to appear until line 158, when the audience has been fully acquainted with the necessary facts.

Act I, Scene ii. As an important element in the dramatic exposition, Aufidius is introduced and preparation is made for the part he plays in the entanglements of the rising action. The keynote of "enmity" is again heard when Coriolanus is named as the "old enemy" (line 12) of Aufidius. Attention is called to the external wars which are engrossing Rome and have such an important part to play later in the falling action of the tragedy.

Act I, Scene iii. Now that the central character and his chief opponents have been introduced, it remains for this last of the introductory scenes to bring forward Volumnia, who is so necessary to a complete picture of the hero and to the sequel of the plot. This domestic scene in which both Virgilia and her son also appear, relieves the tension already created by the statement of the internal and external troubles impending.

II. THE COMPLICATION, RISING ACTION, OR GROWTH (TYING OF THE KNOT)

Act I, Scenes iv-x. In the threatened attacks on Rome by the Volsces, Coriolanus stands out as the champion of the city. He is now the ideal hero that wrings only wonder and fervent praise from the timorous souls. In Homeric fashion he meets the leader of the enemy's forces in single combat, and becomes the idol of Rome. By thus building up a heroic-sized figure, the dramatist has prepared the way for making the succeeding mistakes and misunderstandings which entangle Coriolanus and finally drag him down to ruin seem the very essence of tragedy. Aufidius is again shown as a growing rival, and the complication is tightened.

Act II, Scene i. In the second act the complication of the drama is greatly advanced, for at once the weaknesses which have heretofore been only suggested are seen in the glare of full light. Coriolanus lacks that tolerant sympathy for the common people which marks all truly great leaders, and this together with his overweening pride are the rocks on which he is wrecked. This scene looks both backward and forward: it reveals conditions in Rome and anticipates new interests. By contrasting the welcome which Coriolanus receives from the patricians with that given him by the plebeians, Shakespeare is reminding his audience that this is a conflict not only of an individual with his weaknesses but of class with class.

Act II, Scene ii. Up to this point the strongest feelings exposed have been those of jealousy and active enmity toward Coriolanus. Now that his success against the Volsces has made him the popular hero, he is at a turning of the ways. This dramatic opportunity fully to retrieve a safe place in the hearts of the people is not seized by him, and the full significance of the complication is revealed.

Act II, Scene iii. Now is accomplished what has been foreshadowed — Coriolanus is tested and fails. The plebeians, so susceptible to chance moods, are completely alienated by his haughtiness and irony, and the action is hastened when they submit to the suggestions of the intriguing tribunes.

Act III, Scene i. The action is rapid. The way has been fully prepared by preceding events for all that is to follow. One political blunder after another on the part of Coriolanus in dealing with the people gives to this scene the complexion of tragedy itself. Now that all classes are turned against Coriolanus in open hostility, the complication is almost complete.

Act III, Scene ii. A powerful factor in the emotional interest of the drama appears for the second time. Volumnia's influence on both the future of Rome and the character of her son prepares for that dramatic scene in the falling action (V, iii) in which the mother triumphs and Rome is saved.

Act III, Scene iii, lines 1-86. The element of suspense is introduced, and again opportunity is given Coriolanus to retrieve his blunders. In this new failure to measure up to heroic size the dramatic complication is complete.

III. THE CLIMAX, CRISIS, OR TURNING POINT (THE KNOT TIED)

Act III, Scene iii, lines 87-143. In the disastrous close of the career of Coriolanus in Rome comes the crisis of the play.

IV. THE RESOLUTION, FALLING ACTION, OR CONSEQUENCE (THE UNTYING OF THE KNOT)

Act IV, Scene i. Even in his failures Coriolanus is made to retain the eager sympathy of the audience because of the unjust accusations brought against him. And in showing him here as son, husband, and father as well as defeated political leader, the dramatist wins fresh sympathy to his side.

Act IV, Scene ii. This scene is a bit of effective contrast such as only Shakespeare knew how to give. The pride and righteous indignation of Volumnia are shown against the insincerity and cowardice of the tribunes.

Act IV, Scenes iii-iv. Again the external affairs of Rome are forced into prominence, and in the threatened attack of the Volsces on Rome and in the alliance of Coriolanus with Aufidius, the enemy of Rome, the way is opened for the final disaster. There is still, however, so much of purpose and strength in Coriolanus that both sympathy and interest are still centered in him.

Act IV, Scene v. The first step that leads to the final undoing of Coriolanus is taken. Again a certain element of suspense is introduced in the reconciliation effected between sworn enemies. The audience wonders and doubts, then turns expectantly to succeeding events, hoping to find their fears unfounded.

Act IV, Scene vi. As a piece of stage business this scene is most effective, for the audience already knows what is about to befall Rome. The disaster that threatens the tribunes suggests a dénouement eagerly wished for.

Act IV, Scene vii. The resolution is advanced, and the ultimate failure forecasted in the reawakening of jealousy between Aufidius and Coriolanus.

Act V, Scenes i-ii. By picturing the consternation in Rome, and the unsuccessful attempt of Menenius and Cominius to shake Coriolanus from his purpose of destroying the city, a fitting background has been made for the dramatic meeting of the vanquished son and his mother.

Act V, Scene iii. This is the most dramatic and the finest scene of the play. The clash between two strong spirits, and the strength and dignity of the combatants — Coriolanus and Volumnia — intensify the tragic emotion.

Act V, Scenes iv-v. The change in Rome from despair to rejoicing emphasizes the mother's triumph and the son's defeat.

V. DÉNOUEMENT, CATASTROPHE, OR CONCLUSION (THE KNOT UNTIED)

Act V, Scene vi. Coriolanus has failed, yet so great has been the sympathy aroused in his behalf, even in the midst of the catastrophe that his sins of haughtiness and prejudice have brought upon him, that the audience is scarcely ready to meet the only solution of the tragic tangle — his violent death.

VII. THE CHARACTERS

CORIOLANUS

The Coriolanus that Shakespeare found in Plutarch is referred to by the Greek historian in these calm and weighty sentences :

While the force and vigour of his soul, and a persevering constancy in all he undertook, led him successfully into many noble achievements, yet, on the other side, by indulging the vehemence of his passion, and through an obstinate reluctance to yield or accommodate his humours and sentiments to those of people about him, he rendered himself incapable of acting and associating with others. Those who saw with admiration how proof his nature was against all the softness of pleasure, the hardships of service, and the allurements of gain, while allowing to that universal firmness of his the respective names of temperance, fortitude, and justice, yet, in the life of the citizen and the statesman, could not choose but be disgusted at the severity and ruggedness of his deportment, and with his overbearing, haughty, and imperious temper. Education and study, and the favours of the Muses, confer no greater benefit on those that seek them than these humanizing and civilizing lessons, which teach our natural qualities to submit to the limitations prescribed by reason, and to avoid the wildness of extremes

Shakespeare not only makes pride the master-principle of Coriolanus but also shows that his pride is rendered uncontrollable by passion. It is therefore strictly characteristic of the man that an unexpected word of reproach stings him to the quick: the instant it touches his ear, he explodes like a rocket. It is on this knowledge that the wily tribunes work, watching the time to sting him into some fatal provocation of popular resentment. Here, with great judgment, and without any hint from Plutarch, Shakespeare makes Aufidius, when the time is ripe, touch him into an ecstasy of passionate rage by spitting the term 'boy' at him. Because of the utter unfitness of such an epithet, his very pride, if restrained by reason and self-respect, would have caused him to answer it with calm and silent scorn. But he resents it in proportion as it strikes wide of him, and makes its very absurdity the cause of its power over him.

The people would gladly reward his noble acts with the highest honours in their gift, if they did not say to themselves, "he pays himself with being proud." They glory in his valor and prowess, but complain that he is too proud of being so valiant. They feel that his heroic exploits are done not at all to win their respect and good will, or from any impulse of patriotism, but only to feed his inordinate egotism. They even grant that the fault is something inherent in his nature, and are ready to make large allowance for him on this score. But he seems to them to delight in serving them only to turn his service into a vantage-ground for spurning them.

On the other hand, there is much in the people that is not deserving of respect. This Coriòlanus seizes on greedily. He scorns their meanness, and uses this as the cause for scorning them. He cannot see in them anything that is not vile. Still he is placed where his pride cannot reach its mark but by their suffrage; he must pay his court to that which most galls and offends it. He therefore tries to have his greatness force honours from them in spite of his contempt of them, because such a contradiction between their feeling and their acting serves to emphasize his superiority. This is well shown in the words of one of those almost characterless speakers whom Shakespeare sometimes endows with much candor and shrewdness of observation, and then uses as the mouthpiece of his own judgment :

If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love. [II, ii, 15-21]

Hence, when he goes out to beg their voices, he is careful to spice his requests with mockery, and to let them see that his spirit disclaims what his tongue speaks.

It is a bold but most natural stroke of character that Coriolanus, notwithstanding his alleged intense aversion to seeming at all the thing he is not, can yet skillfully hide his feelings when it serves his purpose well. From his bearing toward the people, one would suppose it were quite impossible for him to practice any sort of concealment. On this ground Menenius apologizes for his rough bluntness :

His nature is too noble for the world :
 He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
 Or Jove for 's power to thunder : his heart 's his mouth :
 What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent.

[III, i, 255-258]

Consider this : he has been bred i' th' wars
 Since he could draw a sword, and is ill-school'd
 In bolted language : meal and bran together
 He throws without distinction. [III, i, 319-322]

Thus others think him, and even he thinks himself, utterly incapable of insincerity. When his friends entreat him to comply outwardly with the people's humor, he frankly declares :

I will not do 't ;
 Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
 And by my body's action teach my mind
 A most inherent baseness. [III, ii, 120-123]

Coriolanus, however, is not altogether " himself his world and his own god " : he has other and better forces, which often rise against his egotism, and sometimes prevail over it. His character is indeed contradictory, and all its parts, good and bad, are fashioned on so large a scale as to yield sufficient evidence for making out a strong case either of all blame or of all praise. At the same time the several lines are so bold and pronounced that it is not easy for one to keep clear of extremes. Even his pride, with all its anti-social harshness, is not destitute of amiable and engaging features. There are some points of nobleness and magnanimity about it. His attitude toward family, country, talents, and courage enter into its composition, and make it a part of the general greatness of his character.

With all his passionate craving for renown, Coriolanus still counts it among his chief honours to be the cause that others are honoured. If he is jealous of the position of his fellow patricians, he is jealous of their virtue too, and would have them deserve to hold the place of supreme power and reverence in the State. It should be remembered that the admission of the people to a direct share in the government is a new idea to Coriolanus. He resents it as an invasion of ancient right; he fears it as a seed of political anarchy and dissolution. Old Rome was indeed a wonderful nation, and Shakespeare found in the character of Coriolanus an apt and inviting occasion for representing the struggle between those two antagonist forces, whose reconciliation and unity did so much towards building and cementing the later Roman Empire.

Coriolanus is modest. He cannot frame the language of flattery, and he has an honest aversion to being flattered. So far his temper is noble and just, yet he is so ostentatious and emphatic, not to say supercilious, in his disgust of flattery, as to breed some doubt whether, after all, it is anything but egotism in disguise, or whether it is not more the result of arrogance than of real modesty. When he so energetically scolds to hear his "nothings monster'd" (II, ii, 74), there is in his manner a strong suggestion of haughty contempt for his praisers, or a certain critical loftiness of mind, as if he craved occasions for rebuking his friends and admirers, and of making them feel his immense superiority. Men have sometimes towered so high in self-approval as to scorn the approval of their fellows. The attitude of Coriolanus sometimes suggests that he felt his greatness to be of so transcendent a pitch as to make "breath poor and speech unable." Such display of egotism may, and sometimes does, pass for modesty, for it is apt to use the style of that virtue. That Shakespeare saw the germs of this disease in the deep intricacies of the human heart is apparent from his saying of Ulysses that he "speaks not to himself but with a pride that quarrels at self-breath" (Troilus and Cressida, II, iii, 181-182). His delineation of Coriolanus more than once suggests that the hero's disdain of honours is at least partly in the idea that no honours can come up to his merit. This is shown more clearly when his arrogance reaches the height of supposing that all Rome cannot counterbalance his own gigantic importance. On being banished, Coriolanus assumes that the loss of his single person will be worse for Rome than the loss of Rome will be to him, and so retorts:

You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air: I banish you. [III, iii, 120-123]

CORIOLANUS AND HIS MOTHER

Of Coriolanus Plutarch says that the only thing which caused him to love honour was the delight his mother had of him, for nothing made him so happy as that she might always see him return with a crown upon his head, and still embrace him, with tears running down her cheeks for joy. As represented by Shakespeare, he can outface the rest of the world, but his mother, with his household treasures at her side, is too much for him. Even when he has conquered all the armies of his country, and has the State itself at his feet, her strength of soul and patriotic devotion conquer him. In his rapture of self-confidence, he aspires to act the god, but

That she can be like him in pride tempers that quality in him, and disposes him to be like her in other points. We are prepared for this crowning victory of the mother by a lighter example of the same kind in III, ii, where Volumnia urges her son to appease the infuriated multitude by playing the amiable towards them. His pride shows intense repugnance to the undertaking, but she subdues him to it :

At thy choice then :

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour
 Than thou of them. Come all to ruin : let
 Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear
 Thy dangerous stoutness ; for I mock at death
 With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
 Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'st it from me :
 But owe thy pride thyself. [III, ii, 123-130]

CORIOLANUS AND HIS WIFE

The mother's is not the only influence at work to win Coriolanus from his unnatural purpose and recall him to better thoughts. To be sure she does most of the speaking, but her speech is powerfully reënforced by the presence and aspect of others. Little is said of Virgilia, and still less is said by her, but that little is so managed as to infer a great deal. A gentle, retiring, undemonstrative person, she has nevertheless much quiet firmness, and even a dash of something like obstinacy, in her disposition. Her power touches the depths of her husband's heart, and is the more effective with him for being the power of delicacy and sweetness and so utterly unlike his own. When he returns from the war covered with glory, her silent tears of joy are to him sweeter than the loud applause of all the rest. He hails her as "my gracious silence" and plays out his earnest tenderness in the question,

"Wouldst thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home, that weep'st to see me triumph?" (II, i, 167-168). How deeply her still forces have stolen into his being, is effectively shown in what he says to her when she comes with her speechless supplication to second the voice of his mother's remonstrance :

Best of my flesh,
 Forgive my tyranny; but do not say
 For that, 'Forgive our Romans.' O, a kiss
 Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
 Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
 I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
 Hath virgin'd it e'er since. [V, iii, 42-48]

Here he finds his whole household in something more powerful than arms to resist him — the mother, the wife, the child, all are shaming his revenge by standing true to their fatherland against him. The words just quoted show that the power of the silent mourner is even more penetrating than that of the eloquent pleader. The two women have hearts stronger in love than his in pride, and the first object of that love is the old Rome of their fathers. Both the mother and the wife are steadfastly resolved that, if he march any farther against that object, it shall be over their bodies, while the boy's Roman spirit flashes up in the strange declaration,

A shall not tread on me :
 I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.
[V, iii, 127-128]

The hideous unnaturalness of his course is brought fully home to Coriolanus at thus seeing his own flesh and blood instinctively bent on resisting him. In the presence of "the noble sister of Publicola; the moon of Rome" (V, iii, 64-65), he sees how all that is most illustrious in the same proud patrician stock on which he so much prides himself, even those who were most hurt in his banishment, will rather unite with his banishers in imploring the gods against him than surrender their country to his revenge. This suggests that what may have most appealed to Shakespeare in this ancient tale of Roman patriotism was, that while, to the minds of those high-souled men and women it was a wonderful thing to be patricians, to be Romans was a much greater.

ROMAN WOMANHOOD

A nation's favorite legends have a close connection with its character, and are the spontaneous outgrowth of its peculiar genius and spirit. That they reflect its ideals of right and good is what gives them life and currency. In the primitive Roman scheme of thought the warrior held the first place, the mother the second. Womanhood in general was a great power in old Rome, and to be a mother was the highest honour but one. The gods were believed on several occasions to have bestowed special blessings and deliverances on the commonwealth through the women. Temples were built, high honours paid to womanhood, in the faith that the women had repeatedly been the salvation of their country from ruin. In the intercession which prevailed with Coriolanus the women were held to have been kindled and moved to the undertaking by the special inspiration of the gods. This seems to mean that the men of old Rome believed that the gods would not continue to give them success and honour if they ceased to respect their mothers and their wives.

In the legend of Coriolanus the hero's character stands out as a special impersonation of the two great ideas of martial courage and prowess and filial piety and submission. Reverence for parents, the religion of home, the sacredness of the domestic enclosure, worship of the household gods; whatever shed consecration on the family, and surrounded it with the angels of piety and awe—these were the cornerstone of the old Roman discipline, the palladium of the national strength and virtue. To fight bravely, to suffer heroically, for their country were the public parts of manly honour; while its heart and center stood in having something at home worth fighting and suffering for. Of this something motherhood was the soul, and the best thoughts of every worthy Roman drew to the point of being "more brave for this, that they had much to love."

VOLUMNIA

In this view, Volumnia aptly impersonates the woman's and the mother's side of the Roman system. She is a superb figure, a genuine woman throughout, though with a high strain of what may be called manliness pervading her womanhood. She has all of her son's essential strength and greatness of character, and is nearly as proud as he. But her pride has a much less individual and unsocial cast. He is the chief concern of her pride, while self is the chief concern of his. She is proud of him far more for her country's sake than for his or her own. Her supreme ambition is that he should be the greatest among the Romans; and she would have his greatness stand in being more a Roman than any of the others. Hence her pride so flames out in fierce resentment at the sentence of exile that to those who are not in sympathy with her anger she seems insane in her imprecation against the tribunes :

I would the gods had nothing else to do
 But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em
 But once a-day, it would unclog my heart
 Of what lies heavy to 't [IV, ii, 45-48]; and in her hot remonstrance against the quiet weeping grief of her daughter-in-law :

Anger's my meat: I sup upon myself,
 And so shall starve with feeding: come, let's go;
 Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do,
 In anger, Juno-like. [IV, ii, 50-53]

Against the people also she violently raves, and speaks as if she would gladly see Rome burned, since Rome rejects her heart's idol; but the sequel shows this to be all because she is so intensely Roman in spirit. Later her actions speak quite another language, and she is as far from sympathizing with her son in his selfish vindictiveness as she had been from sympathizing with the people's madness in banishing him. That a Roman should aspire to fight his way to the highest honours in Rome seems to her only reasonable, but that he should fight for anything but Rome, is beyond her conception. When, therefore, she sees her son waging war against his country, it seems to her that he is making war against the one sole object or end of war. She would rather die with Rome than see him grow by the death of that for which alone, in her view, a Roman should wish to live.

As the mother's pride is tempered by a more disinterested and patriotic spirit than the son's, so she holds a much more firm and steady course. Her words, in moments of high resentment, fly about wildly, but her heart sticks fast to its cherished aims. And her energy of thought and purpose, if not greater than her son's, yet in the end triumphs over his, because it proceeds on grounds less selfish and personal. She knows and feels that the gods are with her in it. Shakespeare wisely, and out of his own invention, represents her as exhorting Coriolanus to temporize with the people, and to use arts of blandishment for conciliating them :

I prithee now, my son,
 Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
 And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with them)
 Thy knee bussing the stones (for in such business
 Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
 More learned than the ears) waving thy head,
 Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
 Now humble as the ripest mulberry,
 That will not hold the handling : or say to them,
 Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils
 Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
 Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
 In asking their good loves ; but thou wilt frame
 Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
 As thou hast power and person. [III, ii, 72-86]

Like a true woman, she "would dissemble" with her nature, where her fortune and her friends at stake required she should do so in honour. To her sense and judgment of things, deeds are to be weighed more by their ends and effects than by their intrinsic quality. That is, a man should act rather with a view to help and comfort those about him, to serve his country and his kind, than to feed his moral egotism, or any sullen pride, or whim of self-applause. It is even a rule of honour with her that a man should be more considerate of what will further the welfare and happiness of others than of what will please himself, or accord with any inward or ideal standard of his own.

Volumnia, while she appears more admirable than lovely in her style, is an accurate representative of the old Roman matronly character, in which strength and dignity seem to have had rather the better of sweetness and delicacy, but which enshrined the very soul of rectitude and honour. The story of the life of this mother and son, as set forth in the play, reproduces the old Roman domestic system, and the religious awe of motherhood which formed so large and powerful an element in the social constitution of that wonderful people.

AUFIDIUS

Tullus Aufidius makes an effective foil to Coriolanus, the contrast between them being drawn in just the right way to show off the vein of true nobleness in Coriolanus. Aufidius has all the pride and passionateness of the hero, without any of his gratitude and magnanimity. In Coriolanus the spirit of rivalry and emulation never passes the bounds of honour; in Aufidius it turns to downright personal envy and hate. Coriolanus glories in him as an antagonist, and loves to whip him in fair fight, but is far above all thought of ruining him or stabbing him in the dark. The shocking speech of Aufidius, in the first scene where he appears after the taking of Corioles, is a skillful forecast and premonition of his transport of baseness at the close :

Nor sleep nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick ; nor fane nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I find him, were it

At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
 Against the hospitable canon, would I
 Wash my fierce hand in 's heart. [I, x, 19-27]

This speech, of which Coleridge¹ says, "I have such deep faith in Shakespeare's heart-lore, that I take for granted that this is in nature; although I cannot in myself discover any germ of possible feeling, which could wax and unfold itself into such a sentiment," is not a fair index of the speaker's real mind. It is one of those violent and impulsive extravagances of a very ambitious and inconstant nature writhing in an agony of disappointment. In such cases dark thoughts often bubble up from unseen depths in the mind, yet do not crystallize into character. Still Aufidius comes near putting the thought of the speech into act at last. Verplanck has a happy comment on the passage: "The mortification of defeat embitters Aufidius' rivalry into hatred. When, afterwards, his banished rival appeals to his nobler nature, that hatred dies away, and his generous feeling revives. Bitter jealousy and hatred again grow up, as his glories are eclipsed by his former adversary; yet this dark passion, too, finally yields to a generous sorrow at his rival's death."

VIII. STAGE HISTORY

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

Little is known of the earliest stage productions of Coriolanus. No actor of Shakespeare's own time is associated with any character in the play, and even the patient research of Halliwell-Phillips revealed no contemporary reference to its production. The first performance of which we have definite knowledge was given in France in 1639 from an adaptation entitled Coriolan, by Urbane Chevreau. A second play of the same name by Gaspard Abeille was also produced in France in 1676. The first recorded appearance on the English stage was a version by Nahum Tate, entitled The Ingratitude of a Commonwealth, or The Fall of Caius Martius Coriolanus, which was published in 1682 and produced the same year at the Theatre Royal. Tate, in the dedication of his drama to the Right Honourable Charles Lord Herbert, admits that the tragedy is not altogether original with him, he "having in this adventure launcht out in Shakespeare's bottom." In the main he follows Shakespeare's plot, but the diction, which is commonplaceness itself, is wholly the author's. Among the attempts which he made to improve on Shakespeare the most interesting is the addition of a mad scene for Volumnia, the suicide of Virgilia, and the death of Aufidius and Menenius.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

Not until 1719 do we hear of a second English adaptation of Coriolanus. In that year John Dennis's The Invader of his Country, or the Fatal Resentment, was played at the Drury Lane Theatre. The dedication of the published version, which appeared in 1729, reveals the fact that the stage production was a conspicuous failure. After his opening sentences Dennis says, "My Lord¹ Coriolanus throws himself at your Grace's feet, in order to obtain justice of you, after having received as injurious treatment from the petulant deportment of two or three insolent players as ever he did

from the brutal rage of the rabble. He has been banished from our theatre by the one, thro' a mistaken greediness of gain, as the other formerly expelled him from Rome through a groundless jealousy of power." Like Tate, Dennis outrageously mangled Shakespeare, although claiming that his production was "but a grafting upon Shakespeare's play."¹

About the middle of the century a tragedy called Coriolanus was given at the Smock Alley Theatre, Dublin, but curiously this is based partly on Shakespeare's drama and partly on a play of the same name written by James Thomson, the author of The Seasons, which was staged in 1749, the year after the poet's death. Thomson had taken as his sources Dionysius of Halicarnassus and Livy, whose narratives differ in many respects from that of Plutarch. It was left to the brilliant actor, John Philip Kemble, and his famous sister, Mrs. Siddons, to popularize this great Shakespearian tragedy on the stage. In an adaptation which was a mixture of Thomson and Shakespeare they appeared at Drury Lane in 1789. "Comparatively little attention was at first attracted by the revival. After a time, however, the part of Coriolanus became considered one of the best, if not the best, in the repertory of Kemble, and the Volumnia of Mrs. Siddons ranked only after her Constance and her Lady Macbeth." — Beeching.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND LATER

Twice in the earlier part of the nineteenth century Kemble produced Coriolanus, each time from the Thomson-Shakespeare version. On November 3, 1806, the play was acted at Covent Garden with Kemble in the title-rôle and Mrs. Siddons as Volumnia, and eleven years later Kemble chose this for his farewell appearance on the stage. In March of 1817 Sir Walter Scott saw him in the play and wrote a few days later: "John Kemble is here to take leave, acting over all his great characters, and with all the spirit of his best years. He played Coriolanus last night fully as well as I ever saw him, and you know what a complete model he is of the Roman."

Within a few months Edmund Kean and Macready appeared on the London stage in Coriolanus in versions which, for the most part, were faithful to the play as written by Shakespeare. Kean was not successful in his interpretation, and Macready did not then add to his reputation by his performance. In 1838, however, he won high praise in the title-rôle in an elaborate revival given at Covent Garden. John Vanderhoff, in 1823, was favorably known in Edinburgh, Manchester, and Liverpool for his Coriolanus, and in 1828 Edwin Forrest's rendering secured an enthusiastic hearing in New York City. In the later years of the century Edwin Booth, John McCullough, and Lawrence Barrett played the part in America.

Sir Henry Irving's production in 1901 was given at a time when the great actor's health prevented him from sustaining the part with effectiveness. Except for M. Joubé's appearance as Coriolanus at a performance in Paris in 1910, and the unsuccessful attempt at revival by Irving, the twentieth century has done little to reawaken interest in the great Roman tragedy.

¹ DRAMATIS PERSONÆ. Rowe was the first to give a list of the characters. His list was imperfect, and subsequent editors enlarged it.

² CAIUS MARTIUS CORIOLANUS. Pronounced 'kā'yus mar'shi-us co-ri-o-lā'nus.' 'Martius' is the form of the name as found in North's Plutarch and in the Folios. The classical form is 'Marcius,' which Rowe was the first to introduce into the text of Shakespeare.

³ TITUS LARTIUS. Pronounced 'tī'tus lar'shi-us.'

⁴ COMINIUS. Pronounced 'co-min'i-us.'

⁵ MENENIUS AGRIPPA. Pronounced 'me-nē'ni-us a-grip'a.'

⁶ SICINIUS VELUTUS. Pronounced 'si-sin'i-us ve-lu'tus.'

⁷ TULLUS AUFIDIUS. Pronounced 'tul'us au-fid'i-us.'

⁸ SCENE: Rome . . . Antium Camb | The Scene is partly in Rome and partly in the Territory of the Volscians Rowe | The Scene is partly in Rome and partly in the Territories of the Volscians and Antiates Theobald | Ff omit.

¹⁰ Antium. Pronounced 'an'shi-um.'

ACT I

SCENE I. Rome. A street

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons

1 CITIZEN. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

ALL. Speak, speak.

1 CITIZEN. You are all resolv'd rather to die than to famish? 5

ALL. Resolv'd, resolv'd.

1 CITIZEN. First, you know Caius Martius is chief enemy to the people.

ALL. We know 't, we know 't.

1 CITIZEN. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict? 11

ALL. No more talking on 't; let it be done: away, away!

2 CITIZEN. One word, good citizens.

ACT I. SCENE I | Actus Primus.
Scæna Prima Ff.—Rome. A street
Camb | A street in Rome Pope | Ff

7. Martius Ff | Marcius Rowe
(and throughout the play).

9. We know 't, we know 't F1 |
We know 't F2F3F4.

For the dramatic construction and analysis of scenes, and the characters, see Introduction.

ACT I. SCENE I. In the Folios the play is divided into acts (given with Latin nomenclature) but not into scenes.

1 CITIZEN. We are accounted poor citizens, the patricians good: what authority surfeits on would relieve us. If they would yield us but the superfluity while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them. Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge. 23

2 CITIZEN. Would you proceed especially against Caius Martius?

ALL. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty. 27

2 CITIZEN. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

16. on F₃F₄ | one F₁F₂.

22. rakes F₁ | raks F₂ | Racks F₃F₄.

15-23. "There grew sedition in the city, because the Senate did favour the rich against the people, who did complain of the sore oppression of usurers, of whom they borrowed money." — Plutarch.

16. good: rich. A play on the ordinary meaning of the word in line 14. With this meaning of 'good' cf. The Merchant of Venice, I, iii, 15-17: "my meaning in saying he is a good man is to have you understand me that he is sufficient." — authority: those in authority. The use of the abstract for the concrete is very common in Coriolanus. So in lines 73, 206, 215, 216, 221, etc.

19-20. the object of our misery: our misery set before them as a spectacle. The general meaning is, Looking at us helps them to take stock of their wealth.

21. sufferance. Either (1) 'suffering' (cf. Julius Caesar, II, i, 115), or (2) 'loss' (cf. Othello, II, i, 23).

22. In 'pikes' and 'rakes' we have a play on words. 'Pike' means both 'spear' and 'pitchfork.' Cf. the proverb, "as lean as a rake."

26. a very dog: brutal, unfeeling. So Kent calls Regan and Goneril "dog-hearted daughters" (King Lear, IV, iii, 47).

1 CITIZEN. Very well, and could be content to give him good report for 't, but that he pays himself with being proud. 32

2 CITIZEN. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 CITIZEN. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienc'd men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. 38

2 CITIZEN. What he cannot help in his nature you account a vice in him: you must in no way say he is covetous.

1 CITIZEN. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations: he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' th' city is risen: why stay we prating here? to th' Capitol.

ALL. Come, come. 45

1 CITIZEN. Soft! who comes here?

33. 2 CITIZEN Malone | All Ff.

30-31. give him good report: speak well of him.

36-37. to please his mother. "And as for other, the only respect that made them valiant, was they hoped to have honour, but touching Martius, the only thing that made him to love honour was the joy he saw his mother did take of him." — Plutarch.

37. to be partly proud: partly to be proud. With the position of 'partly' compare that of 'only,' I, i, 230; 'almost,' I, ii, 24. Such transpositions are common. See Abbott, § 420.

38. virtue: valour, courage. The original (Latin) meaning. "Now in those days, valiantness was honoured in Rome above all other virtues: which they call virtus, by the name of virtue itself, as including . . . all other special virtues besides." — Plutarch.

42. repetition: recital. Cf. Macbeth, II, iii, 90.

44. Capitol. The temple of Jupiter Optimus Maximus, on the Capitoline hill, where the senate is represented as being assembled.

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA

2 CITIZEN. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath always lov'd the people.

1 CITIZEN. He's one honest enough: would all the rest were so! 50

MENENIUS. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter speak, I pray you.

2 CITIZEN. Our business is not unknown to th' senate: they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds: they say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too. 57

MENENIUS. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

2 CITIZEN. We cannot, sir, we are undone already. 60

MENENIUS. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you: for your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well

47. Scene II Pope.

51-52. Three lines in Ff, ending with 'hand,' 'matter,' 'you.'

52. With F1 | with your F2F3F4.

— matter | F1F2 | matter? Johnson.

53. 2 CITIZEN | 2 Cit. Ff | 1 Cit. Capell and most modern editors (throughout the scene).

47. Menenius Agrippa. "The Senate . . . did send unto them certain of the pleasantest old men, and the most acceptable to the people among them. Of those Menenius Agrippa was he, who was sent for chief man of the message from the Senate." — Plutarch.

53. "The 'First Citizen' is a hater of public men,—the 'Second' of public measures; the first would kill Coriolanus,—the second would repeal the laws relating to corn and usury. He says not one word against Coriolanus." — Knight.

Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them
 Against the Roman state, whose course will on 65
 The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
 Of more strong link asunder than can ever
 Appear in your impediment. For the dearth,
 The gods, not the patricians, make it, and
 Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, 70
 You are transported by calamity
 Thither where more attends you, and you slander
 The helms o' th' state, who care for you like fathers,
 When you curse them as enemies. 74

2 CITIZEN. Care for us! True, indeed! they ne'er car'd for us yet: suffer us to famish, and their store-houses cramm'd with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usu-rers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will;
 and there 's all the love they bear us. 81

MENENIUS. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
 Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you
 A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it, 85

68. your impediment: hindrance on your part. Cf. Othello, V, ii,
 263-264: I have made my way through more impediments
 Than twenty times your stop.

70. Your knees to them, not arms: you must make supplication to the gods and not insurrection against the state.

71-72. transported . . . attends you: carried away by calamity to do what can only bring further calamity.

73. helms: helmsmen. The abstract for the concrete.

77. usury. See quotation from Plutarch, lines 15-23.

But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To stale 't a little more.

2 CITIZEN. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale: but, and 't please you, deliver. 90

MENENIUS. There was a time when all the body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:
That only like a gulf it did remain
I' th' midst o' th' body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing 95
Like labour with the rest, where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answer'd — 100

2 CITIZEN. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

87. stale Theobald | scale Ff.

ing Rowe | cubboarding Ff.

89. and 't Ff | an 't Hanmer.

100. answer'd—Rowe | answer'd.

95. cupboarding Pope | cupbord-

F1F4 | answer. F2 | answers. F3.

87. stale: make stale. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, II, ii, 240; Julius Cæsar, I, ii, 73. 'Scale,' the reading of the Folios, has been defended as meaning 'strip off the husk,' or it may be defended as meaning 'scatter,' a sense still common in English and Scottish dialect.

89. fob off: deceitfully put aside. Cf. 'fubb'd off,' Henry IV, II, i, 37; 'fobb'd' ('cheated,' 'deceived'), Henry IV, I, ii, 68.—and: if. Usually printed 'an' in modern editions.

95. Still: continually. So in II, i, 237; II, ii, 130; IV, i, 28.—cupboarding: putting into itself (as into a cupboard).

96. where: whereas. Frequently so. Cf. I, x, 13; King Lear, I, ii, 89.

98. participate: participating in each other's functions. In Elizabethan English, passive forms were often used for active and, conversely, active for passive. For forms in -ate and the omission of -ed after d and t, see Abbott, § 342.

99. affection: inclination. Cf. line 172; Romeo and Juliet, I, i, 133.

MENENIUS. Sir, I shall tell you. With a kind of smile,
 Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus (For, look you, I may make the belly smile
 As well as speak) it tauntingly replied 105
 To the discontented members, the mutinous parts
 That envied his receipt: even so most fitly,
 As you malign our senators, for that
 They are not such as you.

2 CITIZEN. Your belly's answer? What!
 The kingly-crown'd head, the vigilant eye, 110
 The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,
 Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
 With other muniments and petty helps
 In this our fabric, if that they —

MENENIUS. What then?
 Fore me, this fellow speaks! What then? what then? 115

2 CITIZEN. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
 Who is the sink o' th' body, —

MENENIUS. Well, what then?

2 CITIZEN. The former agents, if they did complain,
 What could the belly answer?

MENENIUS. I will tell you,

105. tauntingly F₄ | taintingly F₁ | tantingly F₂F₃.

102. smile. "The belly . . . laughed at their folly." — Plutarch.

103. The lungs were regarded as the seat of laughter.

107. his receipt: what it received. 'Its' was just coming into use in Shakespeare's day. See Abbott, § 228.

109. The heightened emotional intensity of the Second Citizen now finds expression in blank verse.

115. Fore me. A mild oath, probably softened down from 'before God.' Menenius resents the interruptions.

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little) 120
 Patience awhile; you 'st hear the belly's answer.

2 CITIZEN. Ye're long about it.

MENENIUS. Note me this, good friend;
 Your most grave belly was deliberate,
 Not rash like his accusers, and thus answered:

'True is it, my incorporate friends,' quoth he, 125

'That I receive the general food at first,

Which you do live upon; and fit it is,

Because I am the store-house and the shop

Of the whole body. But, if you do remember,

I send it through the rivers of your blood, 130

Even to the court, the heart, to th' seat o' th' brain,

And through the cranks and offices of man,

The strongest nerves and small inferior veins

From me receive that natural competency

Whereby they live. And though that all at once 135

You, my good friends' — this says the belly, mark me —

2 CITIZEN. Ay, sir; well, well.

MENENIUS. 'Though all at once cannot
 See what I do deliver out to each,

121. you 'st. A provincialism, probably for 'you shall.'

122. me: for me. An ethical dative. See Abbott, § 220.

125. incorporate: united in one body. See note, line 98.

131. th' seat o' th' brain: "the kingly-crowned head, where reason has its throne, while the attendant passions keep their court in the heart."—Clar. Some editors take 'th' seat o' th' brain' to be in apposition with 'heart' and refer to 'the counsellor heart,' line 111.

132. cranks and offices: windings and apartments.

133. nerves: sinews. The words 'nerve,' 'vein,' 'artery,' and 'sinew' were often used interchangeably by Elizabethan writers.

136. You . . . belly. The Folios print this as a parenthesis.

Yet I can make my audit up, that all
 From me do back receive the flour of all, 140
 And leave me but the bran.' What say you to 't?

2 CITIZEN. It was an answer: how apply you this?

MENENIUS. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
 And you the mutinous members: for examine
 Their counsels and their cares; disgest things rightly 145
 Touching the weal o' th' common, you shall find
 No public benefit which you receive
 But it proceeds or comes from them to you,
 And no way from yourselves. What do you think,
 You, the great toe of this assembly? 150

2 CITIZEN. I the great toe! Why the great toe?

MENENIUS. For that, being one o' th' lowest, basest, poorest
 Of this most wise rebellion, thou goest foremost:
 Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,

140. flour | Flowre F₁F₂ | Flowr F₃F₄.

140. flour. The original meaning of 'flour' is 'flower (that is, finest part or quality) of meal.' See textual variants.

143-144. The fable of "The Belly and the Members" is found in collections attributed to Æsop, while a much earlier version exists in an Egyptian papyrus of the twentieth dynasty. It is also extant in the literatures of the Far East. Shakespeare was chiefly indebted to Plutarch, but he probably knew the version in Camden's Remaines, which has some points not in Plutarch. See Introduction, Sources.

145. disgest: digest. Both forms were common. 'Disgest' is still found in English and Scottish dialect.

146. weal o' th' common: common weal. Cf. II, iii, 176.

154. rascal . . . worst in blood to run. From the chase. A 'rascal' was a young, lean, or inferior deer, and hence not fitted to lead the herd. Cf. Henry VI, IV, ii, 48-49:

If we be English deer, be then in blood,
 Not rascal-like to fall down with a pinch.

Lead'st first to win some vantage. 155
 But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs :
 Rome and her rats are at the point of battle ;
 The one side must have bale.

Enter CAIUS MARTIUS

Hail, noble Martius !

MARTIUS. Thanks. What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
 That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion, 160
 Make yourselves scabs ?

I CITIZEN. We have ever your good word.

MARTIUS. He that will give good words to thee will flatter
 Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you curs,
 That like nor peace, nor war ? the one affrights you,
 The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you, 165
 Where he should find you lions, finds you hares :
 Where foxes, geese you are : no surer, no,
 Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
 Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is
 To make him worthy whose offence subdues him, 170

158. bale Theobald | baile F₁F₂ |
 bail F₃F₄. — Scene III Pope.

162. thee Ff | ye Dyce.

167. geese you are: no | Geese
 you are: No Ff | geese: you are no
 Camb Globe.

157. rats. The significance of the word is seen in lines 244–245.

158. have bale: meet with calamity. With 'bale' compare 'baleful.'

161. scabs. Literally and figuratively. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, III, iii, 106–107.

167. The modern punctuation (see textual variants) makes the form of expression more commonplace. — surer: more constant.

169–171. Your virtue . . . did it: you are good for nothing but to set value on those who are punished for their offences, and to curse the justice which punished them.

And curse that justice did it. Who deserves greatness Deserves your hate; and your affections are
 A sick man's appetite, who desires most that
 Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours swims with fins of lead, 175
 And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! trust ye?
 With every minute you do change a mind,
 And call him noble that was now your hate,
 Him vile that was your garland. What's the matter,
 That in these several places of the city 180
 You cry against the noble senate, who
 Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
 Would feed on one another? What's their seeking?

MENENIUS. For corn at their own rates, whereof, they say,
 The city is well stor'd.

MARTIUS. Hang 'em! They say! 185
 They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
 What's done i' th' Capitol: who's like to rise,
 Who thrives and who declines: side factions, and give out
 Conjectural marriages, making parties strong,
 And feebling such as stand not in their liking 190
 Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough!
 Would the nobility lay aside their ruth,

173. sick man's | sick mans F4 |
 sickmans F1F2F3.

179. vile F4 | vilde F1F2F3.
 180. these Ff | the Rowe.

171. that justice did it: that justice which did it. For the apparent omission of the relative see Abbott, § 244.

179. your garland: garlanded by you. Cf. I, ix, 60.

188. side: countenance. Cf. the intransitive sense, IV, ii, 2.

190. feebling: treating as feeble, depreciating. Cf. King John, V, ii, 146: "Shall that victorious hand be feebled here?"

192. ruth: pity, compassion. Cf. Richard II, III, iv, 106.

And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
 With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
 As I could pick my lance. 195

MENENIUS. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded:
 For though abundantly they lack discretion,
 Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
 What says the other troop?

MARTIUS. They are dissolv'd: hang 'em!
 They said they were an-hungry, sigh'd forth proverbs, 200
 That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must eat,
 That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent not
 Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
 They vented their complainings, which being answer'd
 And a petition granted them, a strange one 205
 (To break the heart of generosity,
 And make bold power look pale) they threw their caps
 As they would hang them on the horns o' th' moon,
 Shouting their emulation.

209. Shouting Pope | Shooting Ff.

193-194. I'd . . . slaves: I would quarter and make a quarry of thousands of these slaves. — quarry: a heap of game. A hunter's expression. — quarter'd. With this proleptic or anticipatory use of the perfect participle cf. 'cloven,' I, iv, 21.

195. pick: thrust, hurl, skin to 'pitch.' A variant is 'peck,' found in Henry VIII, V, iv, 94: "I'll peck you o'er the pales else."

200. proverbs. "Proverbial expressions and trite sayings are the flowers of the rhetoric of a vulgar man. . . . A man of fashion never has recourse to proverbs and vulgar aphorisms." — Lord Chesterfield (Letter CLXIII).

206. generosity: nobility, those of noble birth. The original (Latin) meaning. Cf. Measure for Measure, IV, vi, 13: "the generous and gravest citizens."

209. Shouting their emulation: rivaling each other in shouting.

MENENIUS. What is granted them?

MARTIUS. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms,
Of their own choice. One's Junius Brutus, 211
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not — 'S death!
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city
Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time
Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes 215
For insurrection's arguing.

MENENIUS. This is strange.

MARTIUS. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger hastily

MESSENGER. Where's Caius Martius?

MARTIUS. Here: what's the matter?

MESSENGER. The news is, sir, the Volsces are in arms.

MARTIUS. I am glad on 't: then we shall ha' means to vent
Our musty superfluity. See, our best elders! 221

213. unroof'd Theobald | vnroo'ft surrections Ff.
Ff (see note below). 219, 223, etc. Volsces | Volcies
216. insurrection's Theobald | In- F1F2F3 | Volscies F4.

212. and I know not. Plutarch names but two; hence Shakespeare's lack of knowledge. — 'S death: God's death. A petty oath.

213. The similarity of the old form of the letter s with that of f readily accounts for the typographical error in the Folios shown in the textual variants.

215-216. Win upon power: encroach upon those in power, the aristocracy. The abstract for the concrete. See note, line 16. — themes For insurrection's arguing: subjects of argument for those who make an insurrection.

217. fragments. Cf. 'tag-rag people,' Julius Cæsar, I, ii, 256.

221. musty superfluity: superfluity of plebeians that have gone bad. Apparently a play on the "superfluity while it were wholesome," mentioned in line 17, although Martius was not present when that speech was made.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators ;
JUNIUS BRUTUS and SICINIUS VELUTUS

I SENATOR. Martius, 't is true that you have lately told us :
The Volsces are in arms.

MARTIUS. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't.
I sin in envying his nobility ; 225
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

COMINIUS. You have fought together ?

MARTIUS. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he Upon my party, I 'd revolt to make
Only my wars with him. He is a lion 230
That I am proud to hunt.

I SENATOR. Then, worthy Martius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

COMINIUS. It is your former promise.

MARTIUS. Sir, it is,
And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face. 235
What, art thou stiff ? Stand 'st out ?

TITUS. No, Caius Martius ;
I 'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with t' other,
Ere stay behind this business.

222. Enter . . . Senators | Enter Titus Lartius (Lucius F4), with other Sicinius Velutus, Annius (Junius F4) Senatours Ff. — Scene IV Pope.
Brutus Cominius (Cominism F1), 234. Lartius Rowe | Lucius Ff.

224. put you to 't : give you work enough. A colloquialism.

229. Upon my party : on my side. Cf. I, x, 7.

230. Only my wars with him : my wars with him only. Such trans-positions are common. Cf. line 37. See Abbott, § 420.

MENENIUS. O, true-bred!

I SENATOR. Your company to th' Capitol, where, I know,
Our greatest friends attend us.

TITUS. [To COMINIUS] Lead you on. 240

[To MARTIUS] Follow Cominius; we must follow you,
Right worthy you priority.

COMINIUS. Noble Martius.

I SENATOR. [To the Citizens] Hence to your homes; be gone!

MARTIUS. Nay, let them follow:

The Volsces have much corn: take these rats thither
To gnaw their garners. Worshipful mutiners, 245
Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow.

[Citizens steal away. Exeunt all but SICINIUS and BRUTUS]

SICINIUS. Was ever man so proud as is this Martius?

BRUTUS. He has no equal.

SICINIUS. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

BRUTUS. Mark'd you his lip and eyes?

SICINIUS. Nay, but his taunts.

BRUTUS. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

SICINIUS. Bemock the modest moon. 252

239, 243. I SENATOR | Sen. Ff. | prose in Ff.

240-242. Lead you . . . you priority

246. [... Exeunt ... BRUTUS] Ma-

245. mutiners. Cf. 'engineer,' Hamlet, III, iv, 206; 'pionier,' Othello, III, iii, 346. See Abbott, § 443.

245-246. The valour of the plebeians will display itself in gnawing the garners of the Volsces. The figure in 'puts forth' is seen in Henry VIII, III, ii, 352-353:

to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms.

251. gird: jest at, taunt. The original sense is to strike.

Though Martius earn'd them not ; and all his faults
 To Martius shall be honours, though indeed 270
 In aught he merit not.

SICINIUS. Let's hence, and hear
 How the dispatch is made ; and in what fashion,
 More than his singularity, he goes
 Upon this present action.

BRUTUS. Let's along. [Exeunt]

SCENE II. Corioles. The Senate-house

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS with Senators

I SENATOR. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
 That they of Rome are ent'red in our counsels,
 And know how we proceed.

AUFIDIUS. Is it not yours?
 What ever have been thought on in this state,
 That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome 5
 Had circumvention? 'T is not four days gone

SCENE II Rowe | Scene V Pope |

1. Enter . . . with Senators |

 4. on F₃F₄ | one F₁F₂.

272–273. How the dispatch is made : with what form of commission the generals are sent to the war. — in what . . . his singularity : in what style or character other than his usual assumption of superiority. 'Singularity' here has reference to characteristic behaviour.

2. in : into. In Old English 'in' meant 'in' when used with the dative, and 'into' when used with the accusative. Remnants of 'in' meaning 'into' still exist in such phrases as 'cut in two,' 'fall in love.'

4. What : what counsels. It refers back to line 2. — have. The reading of the First Folio ; the other Folios have 'hath.'

5. bodily act : accomplished fact.

6. Had circumvention : found a way to frustrate them.

Since I heard thence : these are the words ; I think

I have the letter here ; yes, here it is :

[Reads] ' They have press'd a power, but it is not known
 Whether for east or west : the dearth is great ; 10
 The people mutinous : and it is rumour'd,
 Cominius, Martius your old enemy
 (Who is of Rome worse hated than of you),
 And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
 These three lead on this preparation 15
 Whither 't is bent : most likely 't is for you :
 Consider of it.'

I SENATOR. Our army's in the field :
 We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
 To answer us.

AUFIDIUS. Nor did you think it folly
 To keep your great pretences veil'd till when 20

9. [Reads] Camb | Reading Theobald | Ff omit.

9. press'd a power : levied a force. "The common people, being set on a broil and bravery with these words, would not appear when the Consuls called their names by a bill, to prest them for the wars. . . . Martius then, who was now grown to great credit, and a stout man besides, and of great reputation with the noblest men of Rome, rose up, and openly spake against these flattering Tribunes . . . but to the wars the people by no means would be brought or constrained."—Plutarch. With 'press'd' compare Richard II, III, ii, 58–59 :

For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd,
 To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown.

15. preparation : military force. Cf. Othello, I, iii, 221–222 : "The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus."

20. pretences : intentions. Cf. Macbeth, II, iii, 136–138 :

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence,
 Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
 Of treasonous malice.

They needs must show themselves ; which in the hatching,
 It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery
 We shall be short'ned in our aim, which was
 To take in many towns ere almost Rome
 Should know we were afoot.

2 SENATOR. Noble Aufidius, 25
 Take your commission ; hie you to your bands :
 Let us alone to guard Corioles :
 If they set down before 's, for the remove Bring up your army : but, I think, you 'll find
 They 've not prepar'd for us.

AUFIDIUS. O, doubt not that ; 30
 I speak from certainties. Nay, more,
 Some parcels of their power are forth already,
 And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
 If we and Caius Martius chance to meet,
 'Tis sworn between us, we shall ever strike 35
 Till one can do no more.

ALL. The gods assist you !

AUFIDIUS. And keep your honours safe !

24. take in: capture. The 'in' is intensive, and the expression implies 'take into one's own hands.' Cf. III, ii, 59; Antony and Cleopatra, I, i, 22-23. — ere almost Rome: almost before Rome. Cf. I, i, 37, 230. "Such transpositions are most natural and frequent in the case of adverbs of limitation." — Abbott.

28-29. If they . . . your army: if the Romans besiege us, bring up your army to remove them.

SCENE III. Rome. A room in MARTIUS' house

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: they set them down on two low stools, and sew

VOLUMNIA. I pray you, daughter, sing, or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: if my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness pluck'd all gaze his way; when, for a day of kings' entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding, I, considering how honour would become such a person, that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir, was pleas'd to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he return'd, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. 15

2. comfortable: comforting. "Adjectives in -ble were originally active (and neuter) as well as passive. Many of the former exist in English, e.g. capable, comfortable, suitable . . . but the majority have become obsolete or remain only with a passive force, as in credible, audible, flexible, which is also the only use of -able as a living formative." — Murray. See Abbott, § 3.

12. war. The battle of Lake Regillus. "Hereupon, after the battle was won, the Dictator . . . crowned Martius with a garland of oaken boughs. For whosoever saveth the life of a Roman, it is the manner among them, to honour him with such a garland." — Plutarch.

VIRGILIA. But had he died in the business, madam, how then?

VOLUMNIA. Then his good report should have been my son: I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Martius, I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. 23

Enter a Gentlewoman

GENTLEWOMAN. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

VIRGILIA. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself.

VOLUMNIA. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum;
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;
As children from a bear, the Volsces shunning him:
Methinks I see him stamp thus, and call thus: 30
'Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear,
Though you were born in Rome'; his bloody brow
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes,
Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. 35

VIRGILIA. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood!

VOLUMNIA. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man
Than gilt his trophy. The breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier

31. on, you F₁F₂ | on ye F₃F₄. what's F₃F₄.

34. that's | thats F₂ | that F₁ | 35. lose F₃F₄ | loose F₁F₂.

25. Beseech: I beseech. — retire myself. The reflexive use of verbs was common in Elizabethan English. See Abbott, § 296.

Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood 40
 At Grecian sword contending: tell Valeria,
 We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gentlewoman]

VIRGILIA. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

VOLUMNIA. He 'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,
 And tread upon his neck. 45

Enter VALERIA with an Usher and a Gentlewoman

VALERIA. My ladies both, good day to you.

VOLUMNIA. Sweet madam.

VIRGILIA. I am glad to see your ladyship.

VALERIA. How do you both? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot in good faith. How does your little son? 51

VIRGILIA. I thank your ladyship: well, good madam.

VOLUMNIA. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his schoolmaster.

VALERIA. O' my word, the father's son: I 'll swear 't is a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I look'd upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: has such a confirm'd countenance.

41. sword contending: tell | sword. F3 | swords contending: tell F4 |
Contenning, tell F1 | swordes Contend- sword, contemning. Tell Camb |
ing: tell F2 | swords Contending: tell swords' contending.—Tell Capell.

41. sword contending: tell. As the variants show, this is one of the textual difficulties of the play. The First Folio reading would suggest that 'Contenning' is the name of a servant (cf. 'Cotus,' IV, v, 3), proper names being almost invariably italicized. Some editors take 'Contenning' as a corrupted stage direction.

49-50. house-keepers. Possibly a play on the word in the sense of 'stayers at home.' With this meaning compare Cymbeline, III, iii, 1. — fine spot: delicate pattern in embroidery. Desdemona's handkerchief was "spotted with strawberries," Othello, III, iii, 435.

57. confirm'd: resolute, determined. Frequently so.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again, and over and over he comes, and up again: catch'd it again: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 't was, he did so set his teeth, and tear it. O, I warrant how he mammock'd it.

VOLUMNIA. One on 's father's moods.

VALERIA. Indeed, la, 't is a noble child.

VIRGILIA. A crack, madam. 65

VALERIA. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

VIRGILIA. No, good madam, I will not out of doors.

VALERIA. Not out of doors!

VOLUMNIA. She shall, she shall. 70

VIRGILIA. Indeed, no, by your patience; I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

VALERIA. Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably: come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

VIRGILIA. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers: but I cannot go thither. 76

VOLUMNIA. Why, I pray you?

VIRGILIA. 'T is not to save labour, nor that I want love.

VALERIA. You would be another Penelope: yet they say all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca

80. yarn F₃F₄ | yearne F₁F₂. —

Ithaca F₃F₄ | Athica F₁F₂.

58. gilded. The epithet "hints at the superficial gloriousness of Coriolanus' ideal." — E. K. Chambers.

62. mammock'd: tore to pieces. Still heard in dialect.

65. crack: lively lad. So in Shallow's account of the boy Jack Falstaff, 2 Henry IV, III, ii, 32-34: "I see him break Skogan's head at the court-gate, when a was a crack, not thus high."

79. Shakespeare's only allusion to the wife of Ulysses.

full of moths. Come; I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

VIRGILIA. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth. 85

VALERIA. In truth, la, go with me, and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

VIRGILIA. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

VALERIA. Verily, I do not jest with you: there came news from him last night. 90

VIRGILIA. Indeed, madam?

VALERIA. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is: the Volsces have an army forth, against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power. Your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioles; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour, and so, I pray, go with us.

VIRGILIA. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter. 100

VOLUMNIA. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

101-107. Irregular verse in Ff.

81. moths. A play on words. The 'moths' are the suitors that gathered about Penelope, the word suggesting also the long period of her waiting for the return of Ulysses. — sensible: sensitive. For forms in -ble see note, line 2.

96. nothing doubt: do not for a moment doubt.

102. disease: deprive of ease, disquiet. The original meaning. 'Disease' in this sense is probably the correct reading in Macbeth, V, iii, 21. — our better mirth: our mirth that would be better without her. 'Better' is proleptic. See note on 'quarter'd,' I, i, 193-194.

VALERIA. In troth I think she would: fare you well, then. Come, good sweet lady. Prithee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us. 105

VIRGILIA. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

VALERIA. Well, then, farewell. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV. Before Corioles

Enter, with drum and colours, MARTIUS, TITUS LARTIUS; Captains and Soldiers: to them a Messenger

MARTIUS. Yonder comes news: a wager they have met.

LARTIUS. My horse to yours, no.

MARTIUS. 'T is done.

LARTIUS. Agreed.

MARTIUS. Say, has our general met the enemy?

MESSENGER. They lie in view, but have not spoke as yet.

LARTIUS. So, the good horse is mine.

MARTIUS. I 'll buy him of you.

LARTIUS. No, I 'll nor sell nor give him: lend you him I will For half a hundred years. Summon the town. 7

1. Enter . . . Soldiers | Enter
Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Souldiers, as before the City Corio-lus (Corialus F1) Ff.

106. at a word: once for all. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, II, i, 118.

1-7. In Plutarch no mention is made of a wager, but after the battle, as in I, ix, 60-62, Cominius presents Coriolanus with a "noble steed . . . with all his trim belonging."

7. Summon the town: summon the town to surrender.

MARTIUS. How far off lie these armies?

MESSENGER.

Within this mile and half.

MARTIUS. Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.
Now, Mars, I prithee, make us quick in work, 10
That we with smoking swords may march from hence
To help our fielded friends. Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley: enter two Senators with others on the walls of Corioles

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

I SENATOR. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,
That's lesser than a little. [Drum afar off.] Hark! our drums
Are bringing forth our youth: we'll break our walls 16
Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. [Alarum far off.] Hark you, far off!
There is Aufidius. List, what work he makes 20
Amongst your cloven army.

MARTIUS. O, they are at it!

LARTIUS. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders, ho!

19. [Alarum . . .] In Ff after 'far off.'

9. larum. An aphetic form of 'alarum,' call to arms.

12. fielded: in the field. Cf. 'agued,' line 38; 'servanted,' V, ii, 77.

14-15. "The Coriolans, making small account of them that lay in camp before the city, made a sally out upon them." — Plutarch.

17. pound us up: pen us up as in a pound. Cf. The Two Gentlemen of Verona, I, i, 110.

21. cloven army. "The Consul Cominius . . . divided his army also into two parts; and taking the one part with himself, he marched towards them that were drawing to the city, out of the country: and the other part of his army he left in the camp with Titus Lartius (one of the valiantest men the Romans had at that time) to resist those that would make any sally out of the city upon them." — Plutarch.

Enter the army of the Volsces

MARTIUS. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.
 Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
 With hearts more proof than shields. Advance, brave Titus,
 They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts, 26
 Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on, my fellows!
 He that retires, I'll take him for a Volse,
 And he shall feel mine edge. [Exit MARTIUS]

Alarum. The Romans are beat back to their trenches.

Re-enter MARTIUS, cursing

MARTIUS. All the contagion of the south light on you, 30
 You shames of Rome! you herd of boils and plagues
 Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
 Farther than seen, and one infect another
 Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
 That bear the shapes of men, how have you run 35
 From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell!

30. Scene VIII Pope.

31. herd of boils | Heard of Byles

F1F2 | Herd of Biles F3F4 | herd of—
 Boils Johnson Camb Globe.

30. Shakespeare always refers to the south wind as hurtful.

31-32. you herd . . . Plaster you o'er. The impulsive thought of the speaker expresses itself in condensed diction, in which 'boils and plagues' stands both in the vocative with 'you herd' and as the subject of the verb 'plaster.' Johnson's punctuation (see textual variants) destroys the spirit of the passage. Schmidt puts a comma after 'plagues' and calls 'plaster' a reflexive.

36-42. "But Martius . . . slew the first enemies he met withal, . . . crying out to the Romans that had turned their backs, and calling them again to fight with a loud voice. For he was even such another, as Cato would have a soldier and a captain to be, not only terrible and fierce to lay about him, but to make the enemy afeard with the sound of his voice, and grimness of his countenance." — Plutarch.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale
 With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home,
 Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,
 And make my wars on you: look to 't. Come on, 40
 If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,
 As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volsces fly, and MARTIUS follows them to the gates

So, now the gates are ope: now prove good seconds:
 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
 Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like. 45
[Enters the gates]

1 SOLDIER. Fool-hardiness, not I.

other Alarum, and Martius follows them to gates, and is shut in F₁F₂.

38. agued fear: fear which has the effect of ague. Cf. Richard II, III, ii, 190: "This ague fit of fear is over-blown."

43. seconds: support. Cf. I, viii, 15.

43-45. "And there perceiving that the Romans retired back, . . . and that there was not one man amongst them that durst venture himself to follow the flying enemies into their city, . . . he did encourage his fellows with words and deeds, crying out to them, that fortune had opened the gates of the city, more for the followers than the fliers." — Plutarch.

47. To th' pot: to certain ruin. Cut in pieces like meat for the pot. Murray quotes from Udall (1542), Erasm. Apoph. 116: "The riche & welthie of his subjectes went dayly to the potte, & wer chopped up."

Re-enter TITUS LARTIUS

LARTIUS. What is become of Martius?

ALL. Slain, sir, doubtless.

I SOLDIER. Following the fliers at the very heels,
With them he enters: who, upon the sudden, 50
Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone,
To answer all the city.

LARTIUS. O noble fellow!
Who sensibly outdares his senseless sword,
And when it bows, stands up. Thou art left, Martius:
A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, 55
Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world 60
Were feverous, and did tremble.

Re-enter MARTIUS, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy

I SOLDIER. Look, sir.

LARTIUS. O, 't is Martius!
Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.

53. sensibly . . . senseless. A touch of euphuism. Steevens quotes Sidney's Arcadia: "Their flesh abode the wounds constantly, as though it were lesse sensible of smart than the senselesse armour."

57. Cato's wish. See note, lines 36-42. Cato lived more than two centuries later than the period of this play.

62. remain. For 'remain' as a noun cf. Macbeth, IV, iii, 148.

SCENE V. Corioles. A streetEnter certain Romans, with spoils

1 ROMAN. This will I carry to Rome.

2 ROMAN. And I this.

3 ROMAN. A murrain on 't! I took this for silver.

MARTIUS. See here these movers that do prize their hours
 At a crack'd drachma! Cushions, leaden spoons, 5
 Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
 Ere yet the fight be done, pack up: down with them!
 And hark, what noise the general makes! To him!
 There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, 10
 Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take

5. drachma Singer | Drachme F₁ F₃ | them. These F₁F₂.

4. with a Trumpet: accompanied by a trumpeter. — movers: miserable creatures (straggling about after plunder). For 'mover' in a good sense cf. Venus and Adonis, 368: "O fairest mover on this mortal round." — prize their hours: value their time.

5. crack'd drachma. The drachma is a silver Greek coin worth about a franc. A cracked drachma was not current. Cf. Hamlet, II, ii, 447-448.

6. Irons of a doit: pieces of iron not worth a farthing. Cf. IV, iv, 17.

8. "The city being taken in this sort, the most part of the soldiers began incontinently to spoil, to carry away, and to look up the booty they had won. But Martius was marvellous angry with them, and cried out on them, that it was no time now to look after spoil, and to run straggling here and there to enrich themselves." — Plutarch.

Convenient numbers to make good the city ;
 Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste
 To help Cominius.

LARTIUS. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st ;
 Thy exercise hath been too violent 15
 For a second course of fight.

MARTIUS. Sir, praise me not :
 My work hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well :
 The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me : to Aufidius thus
 I will appear and fight.

LARTIUS. Now the fair goddess, Fortune, 20
 Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
 Misguide thy opposers' swords ! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page !

MARTIUS. Thy friend no less
 Than those she placeth highest ! So, farewell.

LARTIUS. Thou worthiest Martius ! [Exit MARTIUS] 25
 Go sound thy trumpet in the market-place ;
 Call thither all the officers o' th' town,
 Where they shall know our mind. Away ! [Exeunt]

25. [Exit MARTIUS] Ff omit.

12. make good : hold. Cf. Cymbeline, V, iii, 23.

18. physical : medicinal, salutary. Cf. Julius Cæsar, II, i, 261.

20-23. In Plutarch the prayer is put into the mouth of Martius :
 "Oft holding up his hands to heaven, he besought the gods to be gracious and favourable unto him, that he might come in time to the battle, and in a good hour to hazard his life in defence of his countrymen."

23-24. Thy friend . . . highest : prosperity be thy friend no less than she is the friend of those she placeth highest.

26-28. Addressed to the trumpeter. See note, line 4.

SCENE VI. Near the camp of COMINIUSEnter COMINIUS as it were in retire, with Soldiers

COMINIUS. Breathe you, my friends : well fought ; we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire : believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,
By interims and conveying gusts we have heard 5
The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own,
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encount'ring,
May give you thankful sacrifice ! Thy news ?

Enter a Messenger

MESSENGER. The citizens of Corioles have issued, 10
And given to Lartius and to Martius battle :
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

COMINIUS. Though thou speakest truth,
Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is 't since ?

MESSENGER. Above an hour, my lord. 15

COMINIUS. 'T is not a mile : briefly we heard their drums.

9. Thy news? Addressed to the messenger, whom he catches sight of before the audience does.

16. briefly : "within a short time (measured either backward or forward)." — Murray.

How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

MESSENGER. Spies of the Volsces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about, else had I, sir, 20
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARTIUS

COMINIUS. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!
He has the stamp of Martius, and I have Before-time seen him thus.

MARTIUS. Come I too late?

COMINIUS. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor
More than I know the sound of Martius' tongue 26
From every meaner man.

MARTIUS. Come I too late?

COMINIUS. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

MARTIUS. O, let me clip ye
In arms as sound as when I woo'd in heart; 30

17. confound: waste. Cf. 1 Henry IV, I, iii, 100-101.

22. as he were flay'd: as he would appear were he flayed. 'As' in Shakespeare does not mean 'as if.' The 'if' is implied in the subjunctive. See Abbott, § 107. Cf. I, i, 208; 2 Henry VI, I, i, 103.

29. clip: clasp. Cf. IV, v, 109; Othello, III, iii, 464: "You elements that clip us round about."

30. In arms as sound as I was in heart when I wooed. The semicolon at the end of the line is the punctuation of the Folios. Almost all modern editors place it after 'woo'd.' For 'sound' used of the heart and love cf. Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii, 415: "My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw"; The Winter's Tale, IV, iv, 389: "This shows a sound affection."

As merry as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.

COMINIUS. Flower of warriors,
How is 't with Titus Lartius?

MARTIUS. As with a man busied about decrees :
Condemning some to death, and some to exile ; 35
Ransoming him, or pitying, threat'ning the other ;
Holding Corioles in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

COMINIUS. Where is that slave
Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? 40
Where is he? Call him hither.

MARTIUS. Let him alone ;
He did inform the truth : but for our gentlemen,
The common file (a plague ! tribunes for them !)
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did budge
From rascals worse than they.

COMINIUS. But how prevail'd you? 45

MARTIUS. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think :
Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' th' field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

COMINIUS. Martius,

43. plague! tribunes Rowe|plague-
Tribunes F₁F₂.

46. tell? F₃F₄ | tell, F₁F₂. —
think: Ff | think. Camb.

36. Ransoming him, or pitying: accepting ransom of the one, or letting him go through pity. With 'him' compare 'his,' Macbeth, IV, iii, 79-80:

I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house.

42. but for: had it not been for. Cf. Romeo and Juliet, III, iv, 6. The words may also mean 'but as for,' with 'gentlemen' used ironically for 'the common file,' the plebeians.

We have at disadvantage fought, and did
Retire to win our purpose.

50

MARTIUS. How lies their battle? Know you on which side
They have plac'd their men of trust?

COMINIUS. As I guess, Martius,
Their bands i' th' vaward are the Antiates,
Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

MARTIUS. I do beseech you, 55
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiates,
And that you not delay the present, but, 60
Filling the air with swords advanc'd and darts,
We prove this very hour.

COMINIUS. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those 65
That best can aid your action.

53. Antiates Pope | Antients F₁F₂ | Ancients F₃F₄.

51. battle: battalion, army. Cf. 2 Henry IV, IV, i, 179. "Martius asked him how the order of their enemy's battle was, and on which side they had placed their best fighting men." — Plutarch.

53. vaward: vanguard. The same word is in Plutarch. Cf. Henry V, IV, iii, 130. — Antiates. Pronounced 'an'ti-ates' (classically, 'an-ti-a'tes'). Pope's correction of the Folios (see textual variants) is supported by line 59 and the corresponding passage in Plutarch: "those of the Antiates whom they esteemed to be the warlikest men."

58–59. directly Set me. "Then prayed Martius to be set directly against them." — Plutarch.

AUFIDIUS. We hate alike :
 Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor
 More than thy fame and envy : fix thy foot.

MARTIUS. Let the first budger die the other's slave, 5
 And the gods doom him after !

AUFIDIUS. If I fly, Martius,
 Holloa me like a hare.

MARTIUS. Within these three hours, Tullus,
 Alone I fought in your Corioles walls,
 And made what work I pleas'd : 't is not my blood
 Wherein thou seest me mask'd, for thy revenge 10
 Wrench up thy power to th' highest.

AUFIDIUS. Wert thou the Hector
 That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,
 Thou shouldst not scape me here.

[Here they fight, and certain Volsces come in the aid of AUFIDIUS. MARTIUS fights till they be driven in breathless]

Officious, and not valiant, you have sham'd me
 In your condemned seconds. [Exeunt] 15

4. and envy Ff | I envy Collier.

6-7. If . . . hare | one line in Ff.

7. Holloa | hollow Ff.

15. [Exeunt] Ff omit.

4. fame and envy. These words are really characteristic of both men. Each has fame and is jealous of the other ; and so each hates the other for two reasons, his fame and his jealousy.

8. your Corioles walls. Cf. 'Corioles gates,' II, i, 154; 'our Rome gates,' III, iii, 104. See Abbott, § 22.

12. progeny : lineage, race, family. The original (Latin) meaning. The Trojans were the boasted ancestors of the Romans, and Hector was bravest of them all. Cf. 2 Henry IV, II, iv, 236-237 : "thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon."

14-15. Officious in your interference, you have put me to shame by your damnable support. Aufidius addresses the Volsces.

SCENE IX. The Roman camp

Flourish. Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Enter, at one door, COMINIUS with the Romans: at another door, MARTIUS, with his arm in a scarf

COMINIUS. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
 Thou 'lt not believe thy deeds: but I 'll report it,
 Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
 Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
 I' th' end admire: where ladies shall be frightened, 5
 And, gladly quak'd, hear more: where the dull tribunes,
 That with the fusty plebeians hate thine honours,
 Shall say against their hearts, 'We thank the gods
 Our Rome hath such a soldier!'
 Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast, 10
 Having fully din'd before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power, from the pursuit

LARTIUS. O general,
 Here is the steed, we the caparison:
 Hadst thou beheld —

MARTIUS. Pray now, no more: my mother,
 Who has a charter to extol her blood,

2. Thou 'lt F₄ | Thou't F₁F₂F₃.
 13-14. my . . . blood | one line in Ff.

6. gladly quak'd: liking to be made to quake.

7. plebeians. Pronounced 'plē'be-ans,' as in III, i, 101; V, iv, 35; Antony and Cleopatra, IV, xii, 34; but 'ple-bē'ans' in Titus Andronicus, I, i, 231; Henry V, V, Prologue, 27.

10-11. The fight with Aufidius is but a trifle compared with the taking of Corioles.

14. charter: right, privilege. — blood: flesh and blood, offspring.

When she does praise me grieves me : I have done 15
 As you have done ; that 's what I can : induc'd
 As you have been ; that 's for my country :
 He that has but effected his good will
 Hath overta'en mine act.

COMINIUS. You shall not be
 The grave of your deserving ; Rome must know 20
 The value of her own : 't were a concealment
 Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
 To hide your doings ; and to silence that
 Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
 Would seem but modest : therefore, I beseech you 25
 (In sign of what you are, not to reward
 What you have done) before our army hear me.

MARTIUS. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
 To hear themselves rememb'red.

COMINIUS. Should they not,
 Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude, 30
 And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
 Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store, of all
 The treasure in this field achiev'd and city,

33. achiev'd | atchieved Ff.

18-19. He that . . . mine act: he that has carried out his purpose (done his best) has done as much as I.

21-25. It were no less than stealing and defamation to hide what you have done, and be silent about that which, if vouched for with the highest praises, would seem but modestly praised.

29. To hear: at hearing. Cf. 'to be,' I, i, 254.

29-31. Should they . . . with death. If they did not smart and remind him that they needed probing, they might well fester (because of the ingratitude shown them) and produce death.

31. tent: probe. Cf. Hamlet, II, ii, 626: "I'll tent him to the quick."

We render you the tenth ; to be ta'en forth,
 Before the common distribution, at 35
 Your only choice.

MARTIUS. I thank you, general ;
 But cannot make my heart consent to take
 A bribe to pay my sword : I do refuse it,
 And stand upon my common part with those
 That have beheld the doing. 40

[*A long flourish. They all cry 'Martius ! Martius !'
 cast up their caps and lances : COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare*]

MARTIUS. May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more ! when drums and trumpets shall
 I' th' field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing !

44. all of F₁F₂ | of all F₃F₄.

36-40. "But Martius, stepping forth, told the Consul he most thankfully accepted the gift of his horse, and was a glad man besides, that his service had deserved his General's commendation : and as for his other offer, which was rather a mercenary reward than a honourable recompense, he would have none of it, but was contented to have his equal part with the other soldiers." — Plutarch.

42-46. These lines have led to various alterations of the text. The chief difficulty is 'overture,' for which most editors substitute 'coverture.' But 'overture' here has probably its original sense of 'formal opening.' Martius has been fighting in his country's cause (line 17), and deprecates bribery (line 38) and flattery, which only unfit the soldier for duty. When drums and trumpets on the field of battle shall prove flatterers, well may courts and cities be naught else. When steel loses its power (because the soldier's arm has become effeminate), then let the parasite (who accepts gifts and wins his way by flattery) take the place of the warrior in beginning wars.

44. false-fac'd soothing : hypocritical flattery. Cf. II, ii, 77. Cf. 'sootheest,' King John, III, i, 121.

When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk, 45
 Let him be made an overture for th' wars!
 No more, I say! For that I have not wash'd
 My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile wretch,
 Which without note here 's many else have done,
 You shout me forth 50
 In acclamations hyperbolicall,
 As if I lov'd my little should be dieted
 In praises sauc'd with lies.

COMINIUS. Too modest are you;
 More cruel to your good report than grateful
 To us that give you truly: by your patience, 55
 If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
 Then reason safely with you. Therefore be it known,
 As to us, to all the world, that Caius Martius
 Wears this war's garland: in token of the which, 60
 My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,

 56. 'gainst F1 | against F2F3F4.

45. parasite's silk. Silk was identified with effeminacy. Cf. Dekker and Chettle's Grissil: "Those changeable silk gallants, who read . . . no books but a looking-glass." Under 'silk' Murray quotes Purchas, Verses in Capt. Smith's Virginia: "Fetters are forged For Silke-sotts, Milk-sops."

48. debile: weak, feeble. Cf. All's Well that Ends Well, II, iii, 39.

49. here's many. For the form of the verb see Abbott, § 335.

55. give: represent. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, I, iv, 39-40: "and men's reports Give him much wrong'd."

57. proper: own. The original (Latin) meaning. Cf. Twelfth Night, V, i, 328: "Here at my house, and at my proper cost."

58. reason: talk, converse. So in IV, vi, 51.

With all his trim belonging; and from this time,
 For what he did before Corioles, call him,
 With all th' applause and clamour of the host,

CAIUS MARTIUS CORIOLANUS. Bear 65
 Th' addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums]

ALL. Caius Martius Coriolanus!

CORIOLANUS. I will go wash :
 And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
 Whether I blush, or no : howbeit, I thank you : 70
 I mean to stride your steed, and at all times
 To undercrest your good addition
 To the fairness of my power.

COMINIUS. So, to our tent,
 Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
 To Rome of our success. You, Titus Lartius, 75
 Must to Corioles back : send us to Rome
 The best, with whom we may articulate,
 For their own good and ours.

LARTIUS. I shall, my lord.

CORIOLANUS. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now
 Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg 80
 Of my lord general.

66. addition : title. The technical sense, 'something added to a coat of arms as a mark of honour,' is suggested here. So in line 72.

72-73. To justify, as far as lies in my power, the honourable title bestowed on me. — undercrest. The metaphor is from heraldry.

77. The best : the chief men of Corioles. — articulate : draw up articles of agreement, arrange terms of capitulation.

COMINIUS. Take 't; 't is yours: what is 't?

CORIOLANUS. I sometime lay here in Corioles
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

COMINIUS. O, well begg'd!
Were he the butcher of my son, he should
Be free as is the wind: deliver him, Titus.

LARTIUS. Martius, his name?

CORIOLANUS. By Jupiter, forgot: 90
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd:
Have we no wine here?

COMINIUS. Go we to our tent:
The blood upon your visage dries; 't is time
It should be look'd to: come.

[Exeunt]

82-87. "Among the Volsces there is an old friend and host of mine, an honest wealthy man, and now a prisoner; who, living before in great wealth in his own country, liveth now a poor prisoner, in the hands of his enemies: and yet notwithstanding all this his misery and misfortune, it would do me great pleasure if I could save him from this one danger, to keep him from being sold as a slave." — Plutarch.

89. free as is the wind. Cf. As You Like It, II, vii, 47-49:

I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind
To blow on whom I please;

and The Tempest, I, ii, 498-499:

Thou shalt be free
As mountain winds.

91. "Then they prayed Martius that he would retire to the camp, because they saw he was able to do no more, he was already so wearied with the great pain he had taken, and so faint with the great wounds he had upon him." — Plutarch.

SCENE X. The camp of the Volsces

A flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS bloody, with two or three Soldiers

AUFIDIUS. The town is ta'en!

I SOLDIER. 'T will be deliver'd back on good condition.

AUFIDIUS. Condition?

I would I were a Roman, for I cannot,
Being a Volsce, be that I am. Condition? 5

What good condition can a treaty find
I' th' part that is at mercy? Five times, Martius,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me;
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat. By th' elements, 10

If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll potch at him some way, 15
Or wrath, or craft may get him.

I SOLDIER. He's the devil.

SCENE X Capell. — The . . . (Soul. Sol.) Ff.
Volsces | Ff omit. 3, 5. Condition? Ff | condition! Camb.
2, 16, etc. I SOLDIER | Sould. 10. As F1F4 | And F2F3.

2. good condition: favorable terms. In lines 3 and 5 Aufidius repeats the word in the sense intended by the soldier; then in line 6, with grim irony, he plays on its second meaning, 'quality,' 'character.'

5. be that I am: be myself, be natural. His defeat calls forth the baser side of his nature (cf. lines 12-16).

7. I' th' part: on the side. Cf. I, i, 229; III, i, 143; V, iii, 121.

15. potch at: make a thrust at (as in fencing). The verb is usually transitive and spelled 'poach.'

AUFIDIUS. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valour's poison'd

With only suffering stain by him ; for him
Shall fly out of itself : nor sleep nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick ; nor fane nor Capitol, 20
The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, even there, 25
Against the hospitable canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in 's heart. Go you to th' city ;
Learn how 't is held, and what they are that must Be hostages for Rome.

20. fane | Phane Ff.

17-27. In Lectures and Notes on Shakspeare Coleridge has the following comment on this speech: "I have such deep faith in Shakspeare's heart-lore, that I take for granted that this is in nature, and not as a mere anomaly; though I cannot in myself discover any germ of possible feeling, which could wax and unfold itself into such sentiment as this. However, I perceive that in this speech is meant to be contained a prevention of shock at the after-change in Aufidius' character."

18. With only . . . by him : merely by being outdone by him. — for him : because of him.

20. Being naked, sick : if he (Coriolanus) were naked or sick. The speaker's emotion breaks down the formal rules of grammar.

22. Embarquements : restraints, impediments. A variant of the obsolete word 'embargement,' which means literally 'a placing under embargo.' Coleridge favored Hanmer's reading, 'embankments.'

25. In my own house, under my brother's protection.

26. hospitable canon : laws of hospitality. By Greek and Roman custom the person of a guest was sacred. Even a stranger could claim protection at the hearth.

28. how 't is held : how strongly it is garrisoned.

I SOLDIER. Will not you go?

AUFIDIUS. I am attended at the cypress grove. I pray you
(’T is south the city mills) bring me word thither 31
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

I SOLDIER. I shall, sir. [Exeunt]

30. cypress Rowe | Cyprus Ff.

33. [Exeunt] Ff omit.

31. mills | Mils F₁F₂ | Mill F₃F₄.

30. attended: waited for. Cf. I, i, 72, 240.

31. south the city mills. In 1588 the Corporation of London built four corn mills on the south side of the Thames, not far from where the Globe Theatre was erected in 1599, and it has been suggested that Shakespeare had these in mind. Verity compares Julius Cæsar, I, iii, 75, "As doth the lion in the Capitol," as if Shakespeare were thinking of the lions kept in the Tower of London. Malone says, "Shakespeare frequently introduces those minute local descriptions, probably to give an air of truth to his pieces," and then quotes Romeo and Juliet, I, i, 127-130:

A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad,
Where underneath the grove of sycamore,
That westward rooteth from the city's side,
So early walking did I see your son.

ACT II

SCENE I. Rome. A public place

Enter MENENIUS with the two Tribunes of the people, SICINIUS and BRUTUS

MENENIUS. The augurer tells me we shall have news to-night..

BRUTUS. Good or bad?

MENENIUS. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Martius. 5

SICINIUS. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

MENENIUS. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

SICINIUS. The lamb.

MENENIUS. Ay, to devour him, as the hungry plebeians would the noble Martius. 10

BRUTUS. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

MENENIUS. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

BOTH. Well, sir. 15

MENENIUS. In what enormity is Martius poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

BRUTUS. He's poor in no one fault, but stor'd with all.

SICINIUS. Especially in pride.

BRUTUS. And topping all others in boasting. 20

MENENIUS. This is strange now : do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' th' right-hand file ? do you ?

BOTH. Why, how are we censur'd ?

MENENIUS. Because you talk of pride now, will you not be angry ? 26

BOTH. Well, well, sir, well.

MENENIUS. Why, 't is no great matter ; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience : give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures ; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in being so. You blame Martius for being proud. 32

BRUTUS. We do it not alone, sir.

MENENIUS. I know you can do very little alone, for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single : your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride : O that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves ! O that you could !

BOTH. What then, sir ? 40

20. boasting F₁ | boast F₂F₃F₄.

24. BOTH F₁F₂ | Bru. F₃F₄.

40. BOTH F₁F₂F₃ | Men. F₄ |

22. censured : estimated, regarded. The original (Latin) meaning. Cf. King John, II, i, 328. Cf. 'giddy censure,' I, i, 263.

22-23. th' right-hand file : the patricians. Cf. 'The common file,' I, vi, 43.

36. single : simple, weak. With a play on 'alone.' Cf. 2 Henry IV, I, ii, 206-207 : "your chin double ? your wit single ?"

37-39. "With allusion to the fable, which says that every man has a bag hanging before him in which he puts his neighbours' faults, and another behind him in which he stows his own." — Johnson.

MENENIUS. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, alias fools, as any in Rome.

SICINIUS. Menenius, you are known well enough too. 44

MENENIUS. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in 't: said to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint, hasty and tinder-like upon too trivial motion; one that converses more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning. What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such wealsmen as you are (I cannot call you Lycurguses), if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can say your worships have deliver'd the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadly that tell you have good faces. If you see this in the map of 42-43. unmeriting . . . as: as unmeriting . . . as. In constructions with 'so . . . as,' 'as . . . as,' and the like, the first word or the second is sometimes omitted. See Abbott, § 281.

45. humorous: capricious (following his humours or whims).

46-47. allaying Tiber. Lovelace imitates this in To Althea from Prison:

When flowing cups run swiftly round
With no allaying Thames.

51. wealsmen: statesmen. Used here ironically.

54. can. Theobald's change to 'can't' destroys the irony.

55. the ass in compound with: an ingredient of the fool, with perhaps a punning reference to some Latin grammar rule.

58-59. the map of my microcosm: my face.

my microcosm, follows it that I am known well enough too? what harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too? 61

BRUTUS. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

MENENIUS. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a forset-seller, and then rejourne the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience. When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinch'd with the colic, you make faces like mummers, set up the bloody flag against all patience, and dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones. 73

BRUTUS. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

MENENIUS. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are,

60. bisson Theobald | beesome F₁F₂ | beesom F₃ | besom F₄.

60. bisson conspectuities. A humorous substitute for 'blind eyes.' In Hamlet, II, ii, 529, 'bisson' means 'blinding.' The word 'conspectuities' is coined by Menenius humorously. Cf. his 'empiricutic,' line 109, and 'fidius'd,' line 123.

64. caps and legs: doffing of hats and obeisance. Cf. 'cap,' line 97; 'cap and knee,' 1 Henry IV, IV, iii, 68.

66. forset-seller: faucet-seller, seller of wine-taps. Rowe spelled it 'fosset-seller.'

70. set up the bloody flag: declare war. Cf. Henry V, I, ii, 101.

78-79. you are . . . It is. The punctuation is that of the first three Folios. In the Fourth Folio the arrangement is, "you are; when you speak best unto the purpose, It is," etc.

when you speak best unto the purpose. It is not worth the wagging of your beards, and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entomb'd in an ass's pack-saddle: yet you must be saying 'Martius is proud'; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Deucalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. God-den to your worships: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

159-162. No more . . . my prosperity | prose in Ff.

163. and | Ff print in next line.

164. deed-achieving honour: honour from deeds achieved. In Shakespeare active participles are often used in a passive sense. With 'deed-achieving' compare 'all-obeying' ('obeyed by all'), Antony and Cleopatra, III, xiii, 77.

166. My gracious silence. "This name for his wife, who, while the others are receiving him with loud rejoicings, meets and welcomes him with speechless happiness looking out from her swimming eyes, is conceived in the very fulness of poetical and Shakespearian perfection. It comprises the gracefulness of beauty which distinguishes her, and the gracious effect which her muteness of love-joy has upon him who shrinks from noisy applause and even from merely expressed approbation; and it wonderfully concentrates into one felicitous word the silent softness that characterizes Virgilia." — Cowden Clarke.

Such eyes the widows in Corioles wear,
And mothers that lack sons.

MENENIUS. Now the gods crown thee! 170

CORIOLANUS. And live you yet? [To VALERIA] O my sweet lady, pardon.

VOLUMNIA. I know not where to turn. O, welcome home:
And welcome, general! and ye're welcome all.

MENENIUS. A hundred thousand welcomes. I could weep,
And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy. Welcome! 175

A curse begin at very root on's heart,

That is not glad to see thee! You are three

That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men,

We have some old crab-trees here at home that will not

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors! 180

We call a nettle but a nettle, and

The faults of fools but folly.

COMINIUS. Ever right.

CORIOLANUS. Menenius, ever, ever.

HERALD. Give way there, and go on.

176-177. on's heart, That is not glad: on his heart, that is not glad (on the heart of him, that is not glad). 'His,' retaining its force as the genitive of 'he,' is the antecedent of the relative 'That.' Cf. All's Well that Ends Well, III, iv, 27: "her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear." See Abbott, § 218.

179. crab-trees. The tribunes are meant.

180. grafted to your relish. The fruit will not be to your taste.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
 The good patricians must be visited,
 From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,
 But with them, change of honours.

VOLUMNIA. I have lived
 To see inherited my very wishes, 190
 And the buildings of my fancy : only
 There 's one thing wanting, which I doubt not but
 Our Rome will cast upon thee.

CORIOLANUS. Know, good mother,
 I had rather be their servant in my way
 Than sway with them in theirs.

COMINIUS. On, to the Capitol! 195

[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. BRUTUS and SICINIUS come forward]

BRUTUS. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
 Are spectacl'd to see him : your prattling nurse
 Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
 While she chats him : the kitchen malkin pins

 195. Than F3F4 | Then F1 | Ten 196. Scene IV Pope.

189. change of honours : different honours, fresh honours.

190. To see myself in possession of all I have wished for. Cf. The Tempest, II, ii, 179-181 : "the king and all our company else being drown'd, we will inherit here."

198. rapture : paroxysm, fit. The etymological meaning is 'seizure.' In the earlier editions of Hudson's Shakespeare 'rupture' was introduced as an emendation.

199. chats him : chats about him. Cf. 'speak him,' II, ii, 100; Cymbeline, I, i, 24. See Abbott, § 200. — malkin : slattern. Sometimes written and pronounced 'mawkin.' A diminutive of 'Matilda.'

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck, 200
 Clamb'ring the walls to eye him : stalls, bulks, windows,
 Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
 With variable complexions, all agreeing
 In earnestness to see him : seld-shown flamens
 Do press among the popular throngs, and puff 205
 To win a vulgar station : our veil'd dames
 Commit the war of white and damask in
 Their nicely gawded cheeks to th' wanton spoil
 Of Phœbus' burning kisses : such a pother,
 As if that whatsoever god who leads him 210

201-202. Three lines in Ff.

209. pother Rowe | pooter Ff.

200. lockram : a kind of coarse linen. So called from Locronan ('cell of St. Ronan'), a village in Brittany, where the fabric was formerly made. For the form cf. 'buckram.' — reechy : grimy, dirty. A form of 'reeky.'

201. bulks : framework projecting from the front of a shop.

202-203. leads fill'd . . . variable complexions : men are crowded on the lead-covered roofs, and the ridgepoles are bestridden by all sorts of people. 'Variable' is in marked antithesis to 'all agreeing.'

204. seld-shown : seldom showing themselves to public view. — flamens : a high order of priests appearing only on ceremonial occasions.

206. vulgar station : standing-place among the rabble.

207-208. the war . . . cheeks. Cf. The Taming of the Shrew, IV, v, 30 : "Such war of white and red within her cheeks"; Lucrece, 71-72 :

Their silent war of lilies and of roses,
 Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field.

208. nicely gawded : daintily adorned. Many modern editors write 'nicely-gawded.'

209. Phœbus'. The reference is to Phœbus Apollo, the sun god.

210. that whatsoever god : that god, whatsoever god he be. The 'that' adds force to the sneer of the speaker. Some editors take 'that' with 'if,' as in IV, ii, 13. Cf. Sonnets, xxvi, 9 : "Till whatsoever star that guides my moving."

SICINIUS. On the sudden,
I warrant him consul.

BRUTUS. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

SICINIUS. He cannot temp'rately transport his honours,
From where he should begin and end, but will 216
Lose those he hath won.

BRUTUS. In that there 's comfort.

SICINIUS. Doubt not
The commoners, for whom we stand, but they
Upon their ancient malice will forget,
With the least cause, these his new honours, which 220
That he will give them make I as little question
As he is proud to do 't.

BRUTUS. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' th' market-place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility, 225

211, 240. human Rowe | humane Ff. 225. napless Rowe | Naples Ff.

219. Upon: on the ground of, in consequence of. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, IV, i, 225: "she died upon his words." See Abbott, § 191.

220-222. which That . . . to do 't: that he will give them cause, I have as little doubt as that he is proud of doing it.

225-227. "For the custom of Rome was at that time, that such as did sue for any office, should for certain days before be in the market-place, only with a poor gown on their backs, and without any coat underneath, to pray the citizens to remember them at the day of election: which was thus devised, either to move the people the more, by requesting them in such mean apparel, or else because they might show them their wounds they had gotten in the wars in

SICINIUS. 'T is right.

BRUTUS. It was his word : O, he would miss it, rather Than carry it but by the suit of the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

SICINIUS. I wish no better 230
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

BRUTUS. 'T is most like he will.

SICINIUS. It shall be to him then, as our good wills,
A sure destruction.

BRUTUS. So it must fall out 235
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest the people in what hatred
He still hath held them : that to 's power he would the service of the commonwealth, as manifest marks and testimonies of their valiantness." — Plutarch. North, who translated Plutarch from the French of Amyot (see Introduction), mistook the expression un robe simple ('a single gown') and translated it 'a poor gown.' Shakespeare turned this into 'napless vesture of humility.'

233. as our good wills. Either (1) 'as our dispositions towards him are,' or (2) 'as our advantage requires.'

235. For an end : to bring matters to a crisis. Some editors interpret the phrase to mean 'in short,' 'to cut the matter short.'

236. suggest : suggest to, craftily remind. In Shakespeare 'suggest' and 'suggestion' often imply underhand methods. For the omission of 'to' see Abbott, § 200.

237. still : always, continually. So in II, ii, 130, and often. — to 's power : to the utmost of his power.

Disproportioned their freedoms; holding them,
 In human action and capacity, 240
 Of no more soul nor fitness for the world
 Than camels in their war, who have their provand
 Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
 For sinking under them.

SICINIUS. This, as you say, suggested
 At some time, when his soaring insolence 245
 Shall touch the people (which time shall not want,
 If he be put upon 't, and that 's as easy
 As to set dogs on sheep) will be his fire
 To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
 Shall darken him for ever.

239. Disproportioned: dispossessed them of, robbed them of.

242. their. Hanmer substituted 'the', but 'their' brings out the attitude of the exclusive aristocrat. — provand: provender.

247. put upon 't: instigated to it. Cf. 'putting on,' II, iii, 247.

254-256. An example of what has been called 'Elizabethan colouring.' The Romans are represented as doing what, in the days of chivalry, was done at tiltings and tournaments in honour of the victor. 'Handkercher,' still common in dialect, probably represents the Elizabethan pronunciation.

Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchers, 255

 As to Jove's statue, and the commons made
 A shower and thunder with their caps and shouts:
 I never saw the like.

BRUTUS. Let's to the Capitol,
 And carry with us ears and eyes for th' time, 260
 But hearts for the event.

SICINIUS. Have with you. [Exeunt]

SCENE II. The same. The Capitol

Enter two Officers, to lay cushions

1 OFFICER. Come, come, they are almost here. How many stand for consulships?

2 OFFICER. Three, they say: but 't is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

1 OFFICER. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people. 6

2 OFFICER. Faith, there hath been many great men that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his noble carelessness lets them plainly see 't. 14

I OFFICER. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love. 21

2 OFFICER. He hath deserved worthily of his country, and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to

23. ascent F₂F₃F₄ | assent F₁.

16. waded: would waver. Cf. 'charg'd,' IV, vi, 112. For this simple form of the subjunctive see Abbott, § 361.

19. discover him their opposite: reveal him as their antagonist.

19-21. "He is less to be blamed that seeketh to please and gratify his common people than he that despiseth and disdaineth them, and therefore offereth them wrong and injury, because he would not seem to flatter them, to win the more authority." — Plutarch, Comparison of Alcibiades with Coriolanus.

23-26. those who . . . and report: those who, supple and courteous to the people, doffed their bonnets to them, without doing anything further to win their good opinion and good words. With 'supple and courteous . . . bonneted' cf. 'caps and legs,' II, i, 64; III, ii, 73-86. Knight and Staunton take 'bonneted' in the sense of 'put on their bonnets': "After being supple and courteous (and so having won their ends) they put on their bonnets, and took no more trouble."

25. have. Pope changed this to 'heave.'

be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury : to report otherwise were a malice that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it. 31

I OFFICER. No more of him ; he 's a worthy man : make way, they are coming.

A sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMINIUS the consul, MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, Senators, SICINIUS and BRUTUS : the Senators take their places : the Tribunes take their places by themselves : CORIOLANUS stands

MENENIUS. Having determin'd of the Volsces and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains, 35
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service that
Hath thus stood for his country : therefore, please you,
Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general 40
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Martius Coriolanus ; whom
We met here, both to thank and to remember
With honours like himself.

34. determin'd of : come to a decision concerning.

37. gratify : requite. — his. See note, II, i, 176-177.

41. well-found : fortunately met with. In All's Well that Ends Well, II, i, 105, the word means 'skilled,' 'expert.'

Leave nothing out for length, and make us think
 Rather our state's defective for requital
 Than we to stretch it out. [To the Tribunes] Masters o' th' people,

We do request your kindest ears; and after,
 Your loving motion toward the common body, 50
 To yield what passes here.

SICINIUS. We are convented
 Upon a pleasing treaty, and have hearts
 Inclunable to honour and advance
 The theme of our assembly.

BRUTUS. Which the rather
 We shall be blest to do, if he remember 55
 A kinder value of the people than
 He hath hereto priz'd them at.

MENENIUS. That's off, that's off:
 I would you rather had been silent: please you
 To hear Cominius speak?

BRUTUS. Most willingly;
 But yet my caution was more pertinent 60
 Than the rebuke you give it.

MENENIUS. He loves your people,
 But tie him not to be their bedfellow.

 means for requital, rather than that we lack inclination to extend it.

49-51. after . . . here: afterwards your kind interposition with the common people, that they may grant whatever is decided upon.

51-52. convented Upon: summoned to ratify. Cf. II, iii, 139-140.

57. off: off the subject, "nothing to the purpose." — Johnson.

Worthy Cominius, speak. [CORIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.] Nay, keep your place.

I SENATOR. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

CORIOLANUS. Your honours' pardon: 65
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

BRUTUS. Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not.

CORIOLANUS. No, sir; yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: but your people, 70
I love them as they weigh.

MENENIUS. Pray now, sit down.

CORIOLANUS. I had rather have one scratch my head

When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit]

63. CORIOLANUS rises . . . This, the stage direction of the Folios, indicates that Coriolanus has taken his seat, perhaps after the first speech of Menenius.

68. disbench'd: caused you to leave your seat. Cf. 'bencher,' II, i, 75.

70. sooth'd: flattered, cajoled. Cf. 'soothing,' I, ix, 44.

71. weigh: are worthy. Cf. Much Ado About Nothing, V, i, 92-93:

I know them, yea,

And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple.

74. monster'd: made extraordinary. Cf. King Lear, I, i, 223. —
Masters . . . people. An ironical repetition. Cf. line 48.

(That 's thousand to one good one) when you now see
 He had rather venture all his limbs for honour
 Than one on 's ears to hear it? Proceed, Cominius.

COMINIUS. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
 Should not be utter'd feebly. It is held 80
 That valour is the chiefest virtue and
 Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
 The man I speak of cannot in the world
 Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
 When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought 85
 Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
 Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
 When with his Amazonian chin he drove
 The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
 An o'er-press'd Roman, and i' th' consul's view 90
 Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
 And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,
 When he might act the woman in the scene,

78. one on 's F₃ | on ones F₁F₂ |
 one o's F₄ | one of 's Rowe.

88. chin F₃F₄ | Shinne F₁F₂.
 89. bristled Rowe | brizled Ff.

76. That 's . . . good one: with only one good one in a thousand.

78. one on 's: one of his. Cf. I, iii, 63.

84. singly: by any single man.

85. made a head for: raised an army against.

88. with his Amazonian chin: beardless as an Amazon.

89-90. he bestrid . . . consul's view. "The first time he went to the wars, being but a stripling, was when Tarquin, surnamed the proud . . . did come to Rome with all the aid of the Latins . . . Martius valiantly fought in the sight of the Dictator: and a Roman soldier being thrown to the ground even hard by him, Martius straight bestrid him, and slew the enemy."—Plutarch.

92. on his knee: so that he fell on his knee.

93. In Shakespeare's time women's parts were acted by youths.

He prov'd best man i' th' field, and for his meed
 Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age 95
 Man-ent'red thus, he waxed like a sea,
 And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
 He lurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last,
 Before and in Corioles, let me say,
 I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers, 100
 And by his rare example made the coward
 Turn terror into sport: as weeds before
 A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
 And fell below his stem: his sword, death's stamp,
 Where it did mark, it took from face to foot: 105
 He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
 Was tim'd with dying cries: alone he ent'red,
 The mortal gate of th' city, which he painted
 With shunless destiny: aidless came off,

98. of the F₁|o' th F₂|o' th' F₃F₄.

102. weeds F₁ | Waves F₂F₃F₄.

96. Man-ent'red thus: thus entered into manhood.

98. lurch'd: cheated, robbed. Cf. Ben Jonson, The Silent Woman (1609), V, iv: "Well, Dauphine, you have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland."

100. speak him home: describe him thoroughly. For the force of 'home' cf. 'charge him home,' III, iii, 1.

105. took: made its way. "Take . . . In early use chiefly with to; in later use with any prep. or adv. of direction; usually implying prompt action."—Murray. The punctuation in this line is that of the Folios. Most editors put a semicolon after 'took' and remove the colon from the end of the line, an arrangement that destroys the impressive figure. Cf. Macbeth, I, ii, 22: "Till he unseam'd him from the nave to th' chops."

108–109. mortal: deadly. Cf. III, i, 297.—painted . . . destiny. Plague-stricken houses were painted with a red cross; but there may be here a reminiscence of Exodus, xii, 22–23.—shunless: inevitable.

And with a sudden re-inforcement struck 110
 Corioles like a planet. Now all 's his:
 When, by and by, the din of war gan pierce
 His ready sense; then straight his doubled spirit
 Re-quick'ned what in flesh was fatigate,
 And to the battle came he, where he did 115
 Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
 'T were a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd
 Both field and city ours, he never stood
 To ease his breast with panting.

MENENIUS. Worthy man!

I SENATOR. He cannot but with measure fit the honours
 Which we devise him.

COMINIUS. Our spoils he kick'd at, 121
 And look'd upon things precious as they were
 The common muck of the world: he covets less
 Than misery itself would give, rewards
 His deeds with doing them, and is content 125
 To spend the time to end it.

120-121. I SENATOR | I Sen. Rowe's arrangement | Ff print as prose.
 Rowe | Senat. Ff. — He . . . him 123. of the F1 | o' th F2 | o' th' F3F4.

110-111. struck . . . like a planet. An astrological allusion to the malign influence of adverse planets on human destiny. Cf. Hamlet, I, i, 162: "The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike."

112. gan. An aphetic (but not contracted) form of 'began.'

114. fatigate: fatigued. See Murray (Oxford Dictionary) under 'ate.'

120. with measure: adequately, proportionately. As Verity points out, we have here an example of dramatic irony, for 'the honours' referred to bring on the catastrophe.

124. misery. Perhaps 'avarice,' as suggested by 'covets.' "His mean and simple ordinary of diet . . . was imputed misery and niggardliness in him." — Plutarch, Life of Galba.

126. to end it: merely for the sake of thus spending it.

MENENIUS. He 's right noble :
Let him be call'd for.

I SENATOR. Call Coriolanus.

OFFICER. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS

MENENIUS. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

CORIOLANUS. I do owe them still 130
My life and services.

MENENIUS. It then remains
That you do speak to the people.

CORIOLANUS. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom, for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage : please you 135
That I may pass this doing.

SICINIUS. Sir, the people
Must have their voices ; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

MENENIUS. Put them not to 't :

127. I SENATOR | I. S. Capell | Call for Coriolanus Steevens.
Senat. Ff. — Call Coriolanus Ff | 129. Re-enter . . . | Enter . . . Ff.

133-135. "Now Martius . . . shewed many wounds and cuts upon his body, which he had received in seventeen years' service at the wars, and in many sundry battles, being ever the foremost man that did set out feet to fight. So that there was not a man among the people but was ashamed of himself, to refuse so valiant a man : and one of them said to another, 'we must needs choose him Consul, there is no remedy.'" — Plutarch. Cf. II, iii, 82-84.

137. have their voices : exercise their votes. 'Voice' in this sense occurs in II, iii, 1, and elsewhere in the play.

Pray you, go fit you to the custom, and
 Take to you, as your predecessors have, 140
 Your honour with your form.

CORIOLANUS. It is a part
 That I shall blush in acting, and might well
 Be taken from the people.

 Our purpose to them, and to our noble consul
 Wish we all joy and honour. 150

1 CITIZEN. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 CITIZEN. We may, sir, if we will.

3 CITIZEN. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for, if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members. 12

1 CITIZEN. And to make us no better thought of a little help will serve; for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude. 15

3 CITIZEN. We have been call'd so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some abram, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely colour'd: and truly I

2 CITIZEN. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly? 23

3 CITIZEN. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; 't is strongly wedg'd up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, southward.

2 CITIZEN. Why that way?

3 CITIZEN. To lose itself in a fog, where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife. 30

3 CITIZEN. Are you all resolv'd to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our

My tongue to such a pace) 'Look, sir, my wounds!
I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran
From th' noise of our own drums.'

MENENIUS. O me, the gods! 50
You must not speak of that: you must desire them
To think upon you.

CORIOLANUS. Think upon me? hang 'em!

Which our divines lose by 'em.

CORIANUS. Your enigma?

4 CITIZEN. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not indeed loved the common people. 89

CORIANUS. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 't is a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitly; that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountiful to the desirers: therefore, beseech you I may be consul.

 Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to't:

103. seal: confirm. To 'seal' a contract is to 'ratify' it.

109. Than be humiliated by having to beg for the wages that we have already earned. The rhymed couplets in lines 108–119 indicate the emotional excitement of Coriolanus and give epigrammatic edge to his contempt. 'Deserve' rhymes with 'starve' (see textual variants). Cf. 'carve' and 'serve,' Love's Labour's Lost, IV, i, 55, 56.

110. woolvish toge: wolfish toga. 'Toge' is a monosyllabic form of 'toga,' the gown worn by the Romans in time of peace. Here the reference may be to the toga candida, which was worn by those who canvassed for office. The toga was made of undyed wool. A double meaning was probably intended here in 'woolvish,' referring both to the material of the gown and to the fact that the speaker is really playing the part of the wolf in sheep's clothing, wearing the "napless vesture of humility" (II, i, 225), while he is conscious of being anything but humble.

111. 'Hob' and 'Dick' are Roman roughs with common English names. Another example like 'divines' (line 54) of what Verity calls the "frank Elizabethanism of Shakespeare's Roman plays."

112. The 'vouches' are 'needless' because in his opinion the voice of the people should have no effect on the choice of a consul.

What custom wills, in all things should we do 't,
 The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
 And mountainous error be too highly heapt 115
 For truth to o'er-peer. Rather than fool it so,
 Let the high office and the honour go
 To one that would do thus. I am half through:
 The one part suffered, the other will I do.

 To voice him consul : lay the fault on us. 229

BRUTUS. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures to you,
 How youngly he began to serve his country,
 How long continued, and what stock he springs of,

214. enforce : lay stress on. Cf. III, iii, 3, and see note.

219. portance : bearing. 'Port' is the more common form.

222-224. we labour'd . . . on him : we took pains that there might be no obstacle to prevent you from voting for him. Here we have an excellent piece of that demagogical craft which is summed up in the proverb of holding the dog and hounding it.

231. youngly : early. Cf. Sonnets, XI, 3 : "And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestowest." "But Martius being more inclined to the wars than any other gentleman of his time, began from his childhood to give himself to handle weapons, and daily did exercise himself therein : and he esteemed outward armour to no purpose, unless one were naturally armed within." — Plutarch.

The noble house, o' th' Martians; from whence came
 That Ancus Martius, Numa's daughter's son,
 Who, after great Hostilius, here was king; 235
 Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
 That our best water brought by conduits hither;
 [And he that was surnamed Censorinus,]

233-240. "The house of the Martians at Rome was of the number of the Patricians, out of the which have sprung many noble personages, whereof Ancus Martius was one, King Numa's daughter's son, who was King of Rome after Tullus Hostilius. Of the same house were Publius and Quintus, who brought to Rome their best water they had, by conduits." — Plutarch.

238-240. This is the textual crux of the play. The Folios read :

And Nobly nam'd, so twice being Censor,
 Was his great Ancestor.

The context shows that something is wanting. The easiest assumption is that the printer has omitted a line. The striking similarity of the two lines given in the emended text would make it easy for a printer to omit one or the other. Such an omission is not unusual even in these days of careful typesetting. The material for the missing line is supplied from Plutarch: "Censorinus also came of that family, that was so surnamed, because the people had chosen him censor twice." The only question is that of arrangement. The line should begin with 'And,' the natural connective with what precedes. 'Censorinus' is put at the end of the line because it agrees with the context in preserving a climax as in lines 247-249, and places 'Censorinus' over 'Censor' (spelled with a capital in the Folios). Furthermore, this position of 'Censorinus' is supported by the only two passages in Shakespeare where the word 'surnamed' occurs (Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii, 553; Titus Andronicus, I, i, 23). The word 'so' in the passage from Plutarch merely anticipates the causal clause, and hence plays no part in the emendation. A widely accepted rearrangement of the lines is found in the Globe text :

And [Censorinus] nobly named so,
 Twice being [by the people chosen] censor,
 Was his great ancestor.

And nobly nam'd so, twice being censor,
Was his great ancestor.

SICINIUS. One thus descended, 240
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances; but you have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke 245
Your sudden approbation.

And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to th' Capitol.

16. To hopeless restitution : beyond hope of recovery.

19-20. Ironical. Coriolanus little realizes how soon he will go to Antium, and with what change of feelings.

24. Against all noble sufferance : beyond the endurance of the nobles.

BRUTUS. The people are incens'd against him.

SICINIUS.

Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

CORIOLANUS. Are these your herd?

Must these have voices, that can yield them now,

And straight disclaim their tongues? What are your offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth? 36

Have you not set them on?

MENENIUS.

Be calm, be calm.

CORIOLANUS. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility:

Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule,

40

Nor ever will be ruled.

BRUTUS.

Call 't not a plot:

The people cry you mock'd them; and of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd,

Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

CORIOLANUS. Why, this was known before.

BRUTUS.

Not to them all.

CORIOLANUS. Have you inform'd them sithence?

44. suppliants for F₄ | Suppliants: for F₁F₂F₃.

43-45. "The common people stood also about the palace where the council was kept, . . . persuading themselves that the corn they had bought should be sold good cheap, and that which was given should be divided by the poll, without paying a penny. . . . But Martius . . . did somewhat sharply take up those who went about to gratify the people therein: and called them people-pleasers, and traitors to the Nobility." — Plutarch.

47. sithence. The uncontracted form of 'since.' Shakespeare uses 'sithence' and the shortened form 'sith,' like 'since,' both as an adverb of time and as a subordinating conjunction.

BRUTUS. How? I inform them?

COMINIUS. You are like to do such business.

BRUTUS. Not unlike

Each way, to better yours.

CORIOLANUS. Why then should I be consul? by yond clouds
Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me 51
Your fellow tribune.

SICINIUS. You show too much of that
For which the people stir: if you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit; 55
Or never be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune.

MENENIUS. Let's be calm.

COMINIUS. The people are abus'd; set on. This palt'ring
Becomes not Rome; nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely 60
I' th' plain way of his merit.

48. You . . . business. Theobald gave this speech to Coriolanus.

48-49. Not unlike Each way, to better yours: not unlikely to surpass your action in every way.

58. abus'd: deceived, imposed upon. The word means literally 'use amiss.'—set on. This may be either in the same construction as 'abus'd' and mean 'instigated,' 'led on,' or it may be an imperative in the sense of 'proceed,' 'on to the market-place!'—palt'ring: shuffling, equivocating. Cf. Julius Cæsar, II, i, 124-126:

what other bond
Than secret Romans that have spoke the word,
And will not palter?

60. dishonour'd rub: dishonourable thwarting. Murray defines 'rub' as "an obstacle or impediment by which a bowl is hindered in, or diverted from, its proper course." Cf. Henry V, V, ii, 33: "What rub or what impediment there is."

CORIANUS. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak 't again —

MENENIUS. Not now, not now.

I SENATOR. Not in this heat, sir, now.

CORIANUS. Now as I live, I will. My nobler friends,
I crave their pardons : 65

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them

Regard me, as I do not flatter, and

Therein behold themselves : I say again,

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition, 70

Which we ourselves have ploughed for, sow'd, and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number,

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that

Which they have given to beggars.

MENENIUS. Well, no more.

I SENATOR. No more words, we beseech you.

CORIANUS. How? no more? 70

As for my country, I have shed my blood,

Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs

Coin words till their decay against those measles

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought

The very way to catch them.

69-71. "They nourished against themselves the naughty seed and cockle of insolence and sedition, which had been sowed and scattered abroad amongst the people." — Plutarch.

78. measles: leprous wretches. The word meant both 'lepers' and 'leprosy.'

BRUTUS. You speak o' th' people, 80
As if you were a god, to punish, not
A man of their infirmity.

SICINIUS. 'T were well
We let the people know 't.

MENENIUS. What, what? his choler?

CORIOLANUS. Choler?
Were I as patient as the midnight sleep, 85
By Jove, 't would be my mind!

SICINIUS. It is a mind
That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

CORIOLANUS. Shall remain?
Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you
His absolute 'shall'?

COMINIUS. 'T was from the canon.

CORIOLANUS. 'Shall?' 90
O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave but reckless senators, have you thus Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory 'shall,' being but

89. Triton. The sea demigod that blows his horn of conch shell to raise or calm the waves. A great personage to the little fish.

90. from the canon: contrary to the law. Cf. III, iii, 12-18. Some editors interpret it 'according to the rule.' In Porter and Clarke's 'First Folio' edition, the 'Cannon' of the Folios is retained in the sense of 'big gun.'

93. Hydra. See note, II, iii, 15. Cf. IV, i 1-2.

95. The horn and noise: the noisy horn. A hendiadys.

To say he 'll turn your current in a ditch,
 And make your channel his? If he have power,
 Then vail your ignorance: if none, awake
 Your dangerous lenity: if you are learn'd,
 Be not as common fools; if you are not, 100
 Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
 If they be senators: and they are no less,
 When, both your voices blended, the great'st taste
 Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate,
 And such a one as he, who puts his 'shall,' 105
 His popular 'shall,' against a graver bench
 Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself,
 It makes the consuls base! and my soul aches
 To know, when two authorities are up,
 Neither supreme, how soon confusion 110
 May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
 The one by th' other.

COMINIUS. Well, on to th' market-place.

 The corn o' th' storehouse gratis, as 't was us'd
 Sometime in Greece —

115. Greece — F₃F₄ | Greece. F₁F₂.

98. vail: lower (in token of submission). Cf. 1 Henry VI, V, iii, 25: "France must vail her lofty plumed crest." This word is distinct from 'veil.'

99. Your dangerous lenity: lenity dangerous to you.

101. have cushions by you: sit beside you (in the Capitol).

102-104. and they . . . palates theirs: and they are no less than senators when in the blending of your voices and theirs the flavour tastes most like theirs. The predominant flavour is plebeian.

107. Greece. The birthplace of democracy. See note, lines 116-118.

110. confusion: utter ruin. So in line 190.

111. take: destroy. Cf. IV, iv, 20.

MENENIUS. Well, well, no more of that. 115

CORIOLANUS. Though there the people had more absolute power,

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

BRUTUS. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?

CORIOLANUS. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn 120
Was not our recompense, resting well assur'd
They ne'er did service for't: being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates: this kind of service
Did not deserve corn gratis. Being i' th' war, 125
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. Th' accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,

120. worthier F₁ | worthie F₂ | worthy F₃F₄.

116-118. Though there . . . the state. "They that gave counsel and persuaded, that the corn should be given out to the common people gratis, as they used to do in the cities of Greece, where the people had more absolute power, did but only nourish their disobedience, which would break out in the end, to the utter ruin and overthrow of the whole state."—Plutarch.

120-128. They know . . . senate. "For they will not think it is done in recompence of their service past, sithence they know well enough they have so oft refused to go to the wars when they were commanded: neither for their mutinies when they went with us, whereby they have rebelled and forsaken their country."—Plutarch. —more worthier. Double comparatives and superlatives, to give emphasis, are common in Shakespeare. See Abbott, § 11.

124. thread: pass through. Cf. Richard II, V, v, 17: "To thread the postern of a small needle's eye."

All cause unborn, could never be the native

 How shall this bosom-multiplied digest
 The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express
 What's like to be their words, 'We did request it,
 We are the greater poll, and in true fear
 They gave us our demands.' Thus we debase 135
 The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
 Call our cares fears; which will in time
 Break ope the locks o' th' senate, and bring in
 The crows to peck the eagles.

MENENIUS. Come, enough.

131. this bosom-multiplied. Coriolanus again refers to the plebeians as the Hydra, line 93. In II, iii, 15, he calls them the 'many-headed,' referring to their eating. Here he uses the word 'bosom' as the seat of their thoughts and feelings. How, he asks, can the multitude, with such feelings against the senate, be made to think that the senate is courteous to them? For 'bosom' in this sense compare
A Midsummer Night's Dream, I, i, 216; Othello, III, i, 57-58; The Merchant of Venice, IV, i, 31. A close parallel to 'this bosom-multiplied' is 'the common bosom' (King Lear, V, iii, 49), meaning the hearts of the common people.

132-133. Let their past and present deeds be taken as an indication of what they are likely to speak openly.

134. greater poll: majority. Cf. III, iii, 10.

154. jump: imperil. The 'dangerous physic' which Coriolanus contemplates is the abolition of the tribuneship. For 'jump' as a noun meaning 'hazard (of battle)' compare Antony and Cleopatra, III, viii, 6.

156. The multitudinous tongue. Cf. 'The tongues o' th' common mouth,' line 22. The Hydra is still in his mind. See note, line 131.

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To th' greater bench: in a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said it must be meet, 170
And throw their power i' th' dust.

And follow to thine answer.

174. [Exit Ædile.] Collier | Ff omit.

165. bald: senseless. Cf. 1 Henry IV, I, iii, 65: "bald, unjointed chat." Verity suggests 'in their dotage' as the meaning.

167-168. The punctuation of the Folios is "To' th' greater Bench, in a Rebellion: When what's not meet, but . . ."

173. ædiles: police. These magistrates originally had charge of public buildings, and hence the name, from ædes, 'house.'

174. Go call. The Folios do not place a comma after 'go,' as is usually done in modern editions. In the Elizabethan period 'go' and 'come' still took the simple infinitive (without 'to') to express purpose, where to-day we may still use the infinitive with 'to,' but prefer 'and' with a coördinate verb. Cf. line 225.

212. present : immediate. As in III, iii, 21 ; IV, iii, 42. Often so. Cf. 'presently,' III, iii, 12 ; IV, v, 214.

242. CORIOLANUS | Corio. F₁ | Com. F₂F₃F₄.

242. One time will owe another : one time will have its debt to pay to another ; "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Galatians, vi, 7) ; "they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind" (Hosea, viii, 7). Coriolanus is urged to curb his wrath, and these words are added as a warning rather than as a promise of future victory. Venting his rage will only add fuel to the flame of feeling already kindled against him. This is supported by Menenius's words in lines 256-260.

243. forty. Used indefinitely to express a large number. Commonly so in the Bible. Cf. Genesis, vii, 4 ; Exodus, xvi, 35 ; xxiv, 18.

248. tag : rabble, tag and rag. 'Tag' meant originally "one of the narrow . . . pendent pieces made by slashing the skirt of a garment ; hence, any hanging, ragged or torn piece."—Murray. Cf. 'fragments,' I, i, 217, and see note.

Cf. Julius Cæsar, III, i, 273; King John, II, i, 357. — hunt With modest warrant. It was a high crime for anybody to give the signal ('havoc!') without authority from the general in chief.

276. Hear me speak? will you hear me speak? The punctuation is that of the Folios. Most editors change the question to an imperative.

292. Jove's own book : the book of life. "A Jewish not a Roman idea."—Herford. Cf. Malachi, iii, 16; Revelation, xx, 12.

303. clean kam : all wrong. 'Kam,' or 'cam,' is a Welsh word, meaning 'crooked.' Cf. Cotgrave's Dictionarie (1611) : "contrepoil, against the wooll, the wrong way, cleane contrarie, quite kamme."

BRUTUS. Merely awry: when he did love his country,
It honour'd him.

MENENIUS. The service of the foot, 305
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.

BRUTUS. We'll hear no more:
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence,
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

MENENIUS. One word more, one word: 310
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Proceed by process,
Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

BRUTUS. If it were so — 315

SICINIUS. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our ædiles smote? ourselves resisted? come.

MENENIUS. Consider this: he has been bred i' th' wars
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill-school'd 320

315. so — F₃F₄ | so? F₁F₂.

318. smote? | smot? Capell | smot:

F₁ | smot; F₂ | smot, F₃ | smote, F₄.

320. he Rowe | a Ff.

304. Merely: entirely, absolutely. Cf. Richard II, II, i, 243.

305-307. The service . . . it was. The Folios give this speech to Menenius; Hanmer, following Warburton, transferred it to Sicinius; Lettsom continued it to Brutus. It would be dramatically untrue to put into the mouth of either tribune an argument so palpably unjust. Menenius is to be understood as urging the logical consequences of the tribune's position, by way of refuting it.

309. his infection: the infection of his evil qualities.

313. to 's: to his, to its. 'Its' was just coming into use in Shakespeare's day. See Abbott, § 228.

In bolted language : meal and bran together
 He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
 I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
 Where he shall answer by a lawful form
 (In peace) to his utmost peril.

I SENATOR. Noble tribunes, 325

It is the humane way : the other course
 Will prove too bloody ; and the end of it
 Unknown to the beginning.

SICINIUS. Noble Menenius,
 Be you then as the people's officer :
 Masters, lay down your weapons.

BRUTUS. Go not home. 330

SICINIUS. Meet on the market-place : we'll attend you
 there :

Where, if you bring not Martius, we'll proceed
 In our first way.

MENENIUS. I'll bring him to you.

[To the Senators] Let me desire your company : he must come,

Or what is worst will follow.

I SENATOR. Pray you let's to him.

321. bolted : sifted, refined. The metaphor is found in Henry V, II, ii, 137 : "Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem." — meal and bran. Cf. I, i, 140–141.

323. The Folios add 'in peace' (see textual notes), but the words were obviously caught up by a compositor's error from line 325.

324–325. answer . . . to his utmost peril : answer . . . even to the cost of his life. Cf. Henry VI, III, iv, 43 : "I'll meet thee to thy cost."

CORIOLANUS. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me
 Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
 Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
 That the precipitation might down stretch
 Below the beam of sight; yet will I still 5
 Be thus to them.

A NOBLE. You do the nobler.

CORIOLANUS. I muse my mother
 Does not approve me further, who was wont
 To call them woollen vassals, things created
 To buy and sell with groats, to show bare heads 10
 In congregations, to yawn, be still and wonder,
 When one but of my ordinance stood up

SCENE II Capell | Scene V Pope | | Ff omit.
 Ff omit.—A room . . . house Malone 9. woollen Rowe | Wollen Ff.

2. Shakespeare may have been thinking of his own time, but he was evidently acquainted with the classics. Punishment on the wheel is suggested in the Greek myth of Ixion, although apparently not used in ancient Rome. Tullus Hostilius had Metius Suffetius torn to pieces by horses (Aeneid, VIII, 642), which Livy informs us was the only instance of such punishment in Roman history down to the end of the Republic.

5. beam of sight: range of vision.

9. woollen vassals. A similar contemptuous reference to the coarse clothing of the working classes is in A Midsummer Night's Dream, III, i, 79. The expression may also imply that the men are loafers and unfit for war.

12. ordinance: order, rank. From the sense of 'orderly arrangement.'

To speak of peace or war.

[To VOLUMNIA] I talk of you :

Why did you wish me milder? would you have me

False to my nature? Rather say, I play

15

The man I am.

VOLUMNIA. O, sir, sir, sir,

I would have had you put your power well on,

Before you had worn it out.

CORIOLANUS.

Let go.

VOLUMNIA. You might have been enough the man you are,

With striving less to be so : lesser had been 20

The thwartings of your dispositions, if

You had not show'd them how ye were dispos'd,

Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

CORIOLANUS.

Let them hang.

VOLUMNIA. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS with the Senators

MENENIUS. Come, come, you have been too rough, something too rough :

25

You must return and mend it.

I SENATOR.

There's no remedy ;

24. VOLUMNIA | Volum. Ff | A Patrician Globe.

26. I SENATOR | I. S. Capell | Sen. Ff.

18. Let go : enough, let us have done with it.

21. thwartings. This, Theobald's emendation, is supported by the context and particularly by 'cross' in line 23.

23. Ere . . . power: while they still had it in their power.

24. Some editors give this speech to a Patrician, but Volumnia agrees with her son here to remind him that she feels as he does, and hereby she reveals the wisdom of her advice.

Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

VOLUMNIA. Pray, be counsell'd :
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain that leads my use of anger 30
To better vantage.

MENENIUS. Well said, noble woman !
Before he should thus stoop to th' herd, but that
The violent fit o' th' time craves it as physis
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

CORIOLANUS. What must I do ? 35

MENENIUS. Return to th' tribunes.

CORIOLANUS. Well, what then ? what then ?

MENENIUS. Repent what you have spoke.

CORIOLANUS. For them ? I cannot do it to the gods :
Must I then do't to them ?

VOLUMNIA. You are too absolute ;
Though therein you can never be too noble, 40
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' th' war do grow together : grant that, and tell me,
In peace what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there.

CORIOLANUS. Tush, tush !

32. herd Theobald | heart Ff.

38. them? F₃F₄ | them, F₁F₂.

44. lose F₃F₄ | loose F₁F₂.

45. there. Steevens | there? Ff.

29. little apt : little pliable. In earlier editions of Hudson's Shakespeare Daniel's conjecture of 'tickle-apt' was adopted. Other emendations suggested are 'little soft' (Singer), 'mettle apt' (Staunton), and 'little warp'd' (Bulloch).

39. absolute : positive, uncompromising. Cf. III, i, 90.

MENENIUS.

A good demand.

VOLUMNIA. If it be honour in your wars to seem 46
The same you are not (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy) how is it less or worse
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war, since that to both 50
It stands in like request?

CORIOLANUS. Why force you this?

VOLUMNIA. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To th' people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by th' matter which your heart prompts you,
But with such words that are but roted in 55
Your tongue, though but bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and 60
The hazard of much blood.
I would dissemble with my nature, where

48. adopt F₁F₂F₃ | adapt F₄ | call Ff | roated on Hanmer | rooted in Pope. — is it Ff | is't Pope. Johnson.

55. roted in Malone | roated in 57. allowance Ff | alliance Capell.

52. it lies you on : it is incumbent on you.

55. roted : learned by rote (and so spoken mechanically).

56. though but bastards and. Ingenious attempts have been made to emend this line. In earlier editions of Hudson's Shakespeare Badham's conjecture "thought's bastards, and but" was adopted.

57. Of no allowance to: utterly disavowed by. "Truth sits enthroned on your bosom to sanction your thoughts and language; but your words will be but illegitimate offspring, not born of your heart, having no approval as justification from that truth."—Crosby.

59. take in : capture, subdue. See note, I, ii, 24.

60. put you to your fortune : cause you to risk the fortunes of war. With 'to your fortune' compare 'to his utmost peril,' III, i, 325.

My fortunes and my friends at stake requir'd
 I should do so in honour. I am in this
 Your wife, your son : these senators, the nobles, 65
 And you, will rather show our general louts,
 How you can frown than spend a fawn upon 'em,
 For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
 Of what that want might ruin.

MENENIUS. Noble lady !

Come go with us ; speak fair : you may salve so, 70
 Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
 Of what is past.

VOLUMNIA. I prithee now, my son,
 Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand ;
 And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with them)
 Thy knee bussing the stones (for in such business 75
 Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
 More learned than the ears) waving thy head,

64-65. I am in this Your wife, your son. Cf. Matthew, xii, 47-50.

65-66. The punctuation is that of the Folios. Most editors read, "Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles ; And you will," etc. These changes are unnecessary and involve an awkward anti-climax.

66. general louts : common bumpkins. Cf. 'general filths,' Timon of Athens, IV, i, 6 ; 'the general ear,' Hamlet, II, ii, 589.

69. that want : the want of that ('the inheritance of their loves').

70-72. you may . . . is past : in this way you cannot only cure what is dangerous in the present, but retrieve what is lost.

73. this bonnet. Volumnia touches or points to his bonnet. The 'bonnet' was a soft hat without brim.

74. thus far. Volumnia bends to the ground. Her gestures and choice of words throughout the speech show Coriolanus how she despises the course of action she counsels him to follow. — here be with them : humour them in this.

77-78. The waving of the head indicates humility, and thus often corrects the proud heart, which holds the head aloft. 'Which' refers

Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
 Now humble as the ripest mulberry,
 That will not hold the handling : or say to them, 80
 Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils
 Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
 Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
 In asking their good loves ; but thou wilt frame
 Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far 85
 As thou hast power and person.

MENENIUS. This but done,
 Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours ;
 For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
 As words to little purpose.

VOLUMNIA. Prithee now,
 Go, and be rul'd : although I know thou hadst rather 90
 Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
 Than flatter him in a bower.

Enter COMINIUS

Here is Cominius.

COMINIUS. I have been i' th' market-place ; and, sir, 't is fit to 'waving thy head,' and is in the nominative absolute, a common construction in the Elizabethan period. See Abbott, § 376.

78. thy stout heart. "A stout man of nature." — Plutarch.

79. Now humble : now made humble. In earlier editions of Hudson's Shakespeare Mason's substitution of 'bow' for 'now' was adopted.

83. Were fit . . . to claim : were as fit for thee to use as for them to claim. Cf. lines 124-125. For 'they' see Abbott, § 216.

85. forsooth : in very truth. This is the literal meaning.

88-89. they have . . . little purpose : to win their pardons costs no more than to speak idle words to them.

91. in : into. See note, I, ii, 2. — gulf : whirlpool. Cf. I, i, 93.

You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness or by absence: all's in anger. 95

MENENIUS. Only fair speech.

COMINIUS. I think 't will serve, if he Can thereto frame his spirit.

VOLUMNIA. He must, and will:
Prithee now, say you will, and go about it.

CORIOLANUS. Must I go show them my unbarb'd sconce?
Must I with my base tongue give to my noble heart 100
A lie that it must bear well? I will do 't:
Yet, were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Martius, they to dust should grind it,
And throw 't against the wind. To th' market-place!
You have put me now to such a part, which never 105
I shall discharge to th' life.

COMINIUS. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

VOLUMNIA. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast said

99. unbarb'd Ff | unbarbed Rowe.

101. bear well? Ff | bear? Well,
Pope Globe Camb Delius.

102. plot to lose, Theobald | plot,
to loose F₁F₂ | plot, to lose F₃F₄ |
pelt to lose Hanmer.

99-100. The arrangement is that of the Folios, where line 100 is a typical Alexandrine. The Globe arrangement of this line is, "Must I with base tongue give my noble heart." — unbarb'd sconce: uncovered head. A 'barb' (corrupted from 'bard,' see Murray) was properly a protective covering for the breast and flanks of a war horse. 'Sconce' is a jocular term for 'head.' Both words are used here in a contemptuous sense.

101. bear well? I. The punctuation is that of the Folios; Pope's arrangement (see textual variants), followed in most editions, gives a more commonplace meaning.

102. plot: piece of earth, person. The ordinary interpretation of a puzzling expression. The punctuation of the Folios may be correct, and 'plot' be read in its ordinary sense, and the 'loose' of the First and Second Folios be interpreted in the old sense of 'break up.'

My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

CORIOANUS. Well, I must do 't: 110
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! my throat of war be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my drum, into a pipe,
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lull asleep! the smiles of knaves 115
Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight! a beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips, and my arm'd knees,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms! I will not do 't; 120
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

VOLUMNIA. At thy choice then :
To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let 125
Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death

113. quier'd Ff | quired Camb
Globe. — drum, | drumme Ff.

115. lull Ff | lulls Rowe Globe.
119. stirrup | Stirrop Ff.

114. eunuch: eunuch's. — virgin voice. Cf. Twelfth Night, I, iv, 32–34: "thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound."

115. lull: lulls. For this 'confusion of proximity,' see Abbott, §412.

119. Who. The antecedent is implied in 'my' (line 118).

123. inherent: clinging. The original (Latin) meaning.

125. Than thou of them: than for thee (to beg) of them.

126. feel thy pride: suffer all that thy pride can cause.

127. stoutness: obstinacy. As in V, vi, 27. Cf. 'stout heart,' III, ii, 78.

With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
 Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'st it from me :
 But owe thy pride thyself.

CORIOLANUS. Pray, be content : 130

Mother, I am going to the market-place :
 Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves,
 Cog their hearts from them, and come home below'd
 Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going :
 Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul, 135
 Or never trust to what my tongue can do
 I' th' way of flattery further.

VOLUMNIA. Do your will. [Exit]

COMINIUS. Away! the tribunes do attend you : arm yourself
 To answer mildly ; for they are prepar'd
 With accusations, as I hear, more strong 140
 Than are upon you yet.

CORIOLANUS. The word is, ' mildly.' Pray you, let us go :
 Let them accuse me by invention, I
 Will answer in mine honour.

MENENIUS. Ay, but mildly.

CORIOLANUS. Well, mildly be it then : mildly ! 145
 [Exeunt]

129. suck'st Ff | suck'dst Rowe.
 130. owe F₁ | owne F₂ | own F₃F₄.

130. owe : own. As in V, ii, 77 ; V, vi, 138. Often so.

133. Cog : " deceive, especially by smooth lies." — Schmidt.

138. attend : await. Cf. I, x, 30.

4. on : of. Cf. 'on 't,' I, i, 12. 'Of' and 'on' are frequently interchanged. See Abbott, §§ 175-182.

5. What, will he come? Addressed to the Ædile, whom he sees approaching.

10. by th' poll. Either 'singly,' or 'according to the register.'

11. tribes. Political divisions of the Roman people, originally three in number, finally increased to thirty-five.

SICINIUS. Assemble presently the people hither :
 And when they hear me say, ' It shall be so,
 I' th' right and strength o' th' commons,' be it either
 For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them, 15
 If I say fine, cry ' Fine ' ; if death, cry ' Death,' Insisting on the old prerogative

ÆDILE. I shall inform them.

BRUTUS. And when such time they have begun to cry,
 Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd 20
 Enforce the present execution
 Of what we chance to sentence.

ÆDILE. Very well.

SICINIUS. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
 When we shall hap to give 't them.

12. presently : immediately. Cf. II, iii, 248.

14. either. For the use of 'either' when more than two things are discriminated, cf. Measure for Measure, III, ii, 149.

14-18. th' right and strength o' th' commons . . . the old prerogative And power. "And first of all the Tribunes would in any case (whatsoever became of it) that the people should proceed to give their voices by Tribes, and not by hundreds : for by this means the multitude of the poor needy people (and all such rabble as had nothing to lose, and had less regard of honesty before their eyes) came to be of greater force (because their voices were numbered by the poll) than the noble honest citizens, whose persons and purse did dutifully serve the commonwealth in their wars." — Plutarch.

18. i' th' truth o' th' : according to justice, righteousness, of their case.

21. Enforce : press, demand. Cf. II, iii, 214. — present : immediate.

29–30. and that . . . his neck: and in his heart is that which promises, with our assistance, to break his neck.

32. th' poorest piece: the smallest piece of money.

33. bear the knave: will allow himself to be called knave.

CORIOLANUS. First, hear me speak.

BOTH TRIBUNES. Well, say. Peace, ho!

CORIOLANUS. Shall I be charg'd no further than this Must all determine here?

SICINIUS. I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and are content

CORIOLANUS. I am content.

MENENIUS. Lo, citizens, he says he is content.

The warlike service he has done, consider; think

Upon the wounds his body bears, which show

50

Like graves i' th' holy churchyard.

CORIOLANUS. Scratches with briers,

Scars to move laughter only.

MENENIUS. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,

You find him like a soldier: do not take

His rougher accents for malicious sounds,

55

But, as I say, such as become a soldier,

Rather than envy you.

47. you. F₁F₂F₃ | you? F₄.

55. accents Pope | Actions Ff.

43. determine: terminate, come to an end. So in V, iii, 120.—
demand: ask. The common meaning in Shakespeare.

45. Allow: acknowledge. Cf. 'allowance,' III, ii, 57.

46. censure: judgment, sentence. See note, II, i, 22.

51. Like graves i' th' holy churchyard. Another of the touches that are more Elizabethan than Roman.

57. envy: intend ill will to. Cf. line 95. For the noun 'envy' see
III, iii, 3.

COMINIUS. Well, well, no more.

CORIOLANUS. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd that the very hour 60
You take it off again?

SICINIUS. Answer to us.

CORIOLANUS. Say, then: 't is true, I ought so.

SICINIUS. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical; 65
For which you are a traitor to the people.

CORIOLANUS. How? traitor?

MENENIUS. Nay, temperately: your promise.

CORIOLANUS. The fires i' th' lowest hell fold in the people
Call me their traitor? thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths, 70
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say
'Thou liest' unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

SICINIUS. Mark you this, people?

68. hell fold in Pope | hell. Fould in F₁ | hell, Fould in F₂F₃F₄.

63. contriv'd: conspired, plotted. The usual meaning in Shakespeare. Cf. Julius Cæsar, II, iii, 16.

64. all season'd office: all established order. As shown by Coriolanus's behavior in his candidacy for the consulship. Schmidt interprets 'season'd' as 'qualified' or 'tempered,' as opposed to 'power tyrannical' (line 65).

68. The fires . . . fold in: may the fires . . . envelop.

69. their traitor: traitor to them.—injurious: insulting, insolent.

70. sat: if there sat. Past subjunctive.

71. clutch'd: if there were clutched.

CITIZENS. To th' rock, to th' rock with him!

SICINIUS.

Peace! 75

We need not put new matter to his charge:

What you have seen him do and heard him speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,

Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying

Those whose great power must try him; even this 80

So criminal, and in such capital kind,

Deserves th' extremest death.

BRUTUS.

But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome —

CORIOLANUS.

What do you prate of service?

BRUTUS. I talk of that, that know it.

CORIOLANUS. You?

MENENIUS. Is this the promise that you made your mother?

COMINIUS. Know, I pray you —

CORIOLANUS.

I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

90

To have 't with saying ' Good morrow.'

SICINIUS. For that he has,
As much as in him lies, from time to time
Envi'd against the people, seeking means 95
To pluck away their power, as now at last,
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; in the name o' th' people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we, 100
Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. I' th' people's name,

Coriolanus imprecates upon the plebeians that they may still retain the power of banishing their defenders, till their undiscerning folly, which can foresee no consequences, leave none in the city but themselves; so that, for want of those capable of conducting their defense, they may fall an easy prey to some nation who may conquer them without a struggle.

ACT IV

SCENE I. Rome. Before a gate of the city

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, with the young Nobility of Rome

CORIOLANUS. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:
the beast

With many heads butts me away. Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear; 5
That when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded, craves
A noble cunning. You were us'd to load me
With precepts that would make invincible 10
The heart that conn'd them.

VIRGILIA. O heavens! O heavens!

Nay, I prithee, woman —

VOLUMNIA. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,

And occupations perish!

Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,

If you had been the wife of Hercules,

Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd

Droop not, adieu: farewell, my wife, my mother, 20

I'll do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius,

Thy tears are salter than a younger man's,

And venomous to thine eyes. My sometime general,

I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld

Heart-hardening spectacles. Tell these sad women, 25

As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My mother, you wot well

23. sometime: former. The reference is to Cominius.

26. fond: foolish. This is the original meaning.

27. wot: know. So in IV, v, 164. The present tense of the anomalous verb 'wit' (Anglo-Saxon witan, 'to know'). The Bible (King James version) has the past tense 'wist.' Cf. Exodus, xvi, 15; Mark, ix, 6.

My first son, .

Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee awhile: determine on some course, 35
More than a wild exposture to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee.

CORIOLANUS.

O the gods!

COMINIUS. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth 40

 While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still, and never of me aught
 But what is like me formerly.

MENENIUS. That 's worthily
 As any ear can hear. Come, let 's not weep.
 If I could shake off but one seven years 55
 From these old arms and legs, by the good gods
 I 'd with thee, every foot.

CORIOLANUS. Give me thy hand :
 Come. [Exeunt]

VOLUMNIA. O, ye're well met: the hoarded plague o' th' gods

Requite your love!

MENENIUS. Peace, peace! be not so loud.

VOLUMNIA. If that I could for weeping, you should hear —

Nay, and you shall hear some. [To BRUTUS] Will you be gone?

VIRGILIA. [To SICINIUS] You shall stay too: I would I had the power 15

To say so to my husband.

16-18. "The word 'mankind' is used maliciously by the first speaker, and taken perversely by the second. A 'mankind' woman is a woman with the roughness of a man, and, in an aggravated sense, a woman ferocious, violent. . . . In this sense Sicinius asks Volumnia if she be 'mankind.' She takes 'mankind' for a 'human creature,' and accordingly cries out: 'Note but this, fool, Was not a man my father?'" — Johnson. In The Winter's Tale, II, iii, 67, Leontes, in anger, calls Paulina 'a mankind witch.'

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome
Than thou hast spoken words?

SICINIUS. O blessed heavens! 20

VOLUMNIA. Moe noble blows than ever thou wise words;
And for Rome's good. I'll tell thee what; yet go:
Nay, but thou shalt stay too: I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

SICINIUS. What then?

VIRGILIA. What then? 25

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

VOLUMNIA. Bastards and all.

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

MENENIUS. Come, come, peace!

SICINIUS. I would he had continued to his country 30
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

BRUTUS. I would he had.

VOLUMNIA. 'I would he had'? 'T was you incens'd the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth

As I can of those mysteries which heaven 35

Will not have earth to know.

 Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

BRUTUS. Well, well, we'll leave you.

SICINIUS. Why stay we to be baited
 With one that wants her wits?

[Exeunt Tribunes]

VOLUMNIA. Take my prayers with you.
 I would the gods had nothing else to do 45
 But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em
 But once a-day, it would unclog my heart
 Of what lies heavy to 't.

MENENIUS. You have told them home,
 And, by my troth, you have cause: you'll sup with me.

VOLUMNIA. Anger's my meat: I sup upon myself, 50
 And so shall starve with feeding: come, let's go;
 Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do,
 In anger, Juno-like: come, come, come.

VOLSCE. Nicanor? no.

ROMAN. The same, sir.

VOLSCE. You had more beard when I last saw you, but your favour is well appear'd by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there. You have well saved me a day's journey.

SCENE III. Such a side scene as this not only marks time in the dramatic action; it circumstantializes the events. The homely personal touches give verisimilitude, as in the realism of De Foe. Compare similar scenes in Macbeth, II, iv; Julius Cæsar, II, iv; Richard II, III, iv. Such scenes are always original with Shakespeare; they have no parallel in his literary sources. "Shakespeare's wonderful judgment appears . . . in the introduction of some incident or other, though no way connected, yet serving to give an air of historic fact. Thus the scene . . . realizes the thing . . . gives an individuality, a liveliness and presence." — Coleridge.

9. your favour . . . your tongue: your countenance is testified to by your accent. Or, your identity is established by your voice. This transitive use of 'appear' is supported by Cymbeline, III, iv, 148, "That which, to appear itself, must not yet be." Cf. 'it appear itself,' Much Ado About Nothing, I, ii, 22. Murray gives no transitive use of 'appear.' Abbott, § 296, suggests that it may be used reflexively.

ROMAN. There hath been in Rome strange insurrections : the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles. 13

VOLSCE. Hath been? is it ended then? Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

ROMAN. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again: for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out. 22

VOLSCE. Coriolanus banish'd?

ROMAN. Banish'd, sir.

VOLSCE. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

ROMAN. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country. 31

VOLSCE. He cannot choose: I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

ROMAN. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you? 37

VOLSCE. A most royal one: the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. 40

ROMAN. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

VOLSCE. You take my part from me, sir ; I have the most cause to be glad of yours. 45

ROMAN. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV. Antium. Before AUFIDIUS'S house

CORIOLANUS. A goodly city is this Antium. City,

It was even twilight when he entered the city of Antium, and many people met him in the streets, but no man knew him." — Plutarch.

CITIZEN. And you.

CORIOLANUS. Direct me, if it be your will,
Where great Aufidius lies : is he in Antium ?

CITIZEN. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state
At his house this night.

CITIZEN. This, here before you.

CORIOLANUS. Thank you, sir, farewell.

55-102. The following affords a most interesting example of Shakespeare's use of source-material. "Then Martius unmuffled himself, and after he had paused awhile, making no answer, he said unto him: If thou knowest me not yet, Tullus, and, seeing me, dost not perhaps believe me to be the man I am indeed, I must of necessity bewray myself to be that I am. I am Caius Martius, who hath done to thyself particularly, and to all the Volsces generally, great hurt and mischief, which I cannot deny for my surname of Coriolanus that I bear. For I never had other benefit nor recompence of the true and painful service I have done, and the extreme dangers I have been in, but this only surname: a good memory and witness of the malice and displeasure thou shouldst bear me. Indeed the name only remaineth with me: for the rest the envy and cruelty of the people of Rome have taken from me, by the sufferance of the dastardly nobility and magistrates, who have forsaken me, and let me be banished by the people. This extremity hath now driven me to come as a poor suitor, to take thy chimney-hearth, not of any hope I have to save my life thereby: for if I had feared death, I would not have come hither to have put myself in hazard: but pricked forward with desire to be revenged of them that thus have banished me; which now I do begin, in putting my person into the hands of their enemies. Wherefore, if thou hast any heart to be wrecked of the injuries thy enemies have done thee, speed thee now, and let my misery serve thy turn, and so use it as my service may be a benefit to the Volsces: promising thee, that I will fight with better good will for all you than I did when I was against you, knowing that they fight more valiantly who know the force of the enemy, than such as have never proved it. And if it be so that thou dare not, and that thou art weary to prove fortune any more, then am I also weary to live any longer. And it were no wisdom in thee, to save the life of him, who hath been heretofore thy mortal enemy, and whose service now can nothing help nor pleasure thee." — Plutarch.

Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not 56
 Think me for the man I am, necessity
 Commands me name myself.

AUFIDIUS. What is thy name?

CORIOLANUS. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears
 And harsh in sound to thine.

AUFIDIUS. Say, what's thy name? 60

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
 Bears a command in't: though thy tackle's torn,
 Thou show'st a noble vessel: what's thy name?

CORIOLANUS. Prepare thy brow to frown: know'st thou me yet?

AUFIDIUS. I know thee not: thy name? 65

CORIOLANUS. My name is Caius Martius, who hath done
 To thee particularly, and to all the Volsces
 Great hurt and mischief: thereto witness may
 My surname, Coriolanus. The painful service,
 The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood 70
 Shed for my thankless country, are requited
 But with that surname; a good memory,
 And witness of the malice and displeasure
 Which thou shouldst bear me: only that name remains:
 The cruelty and envy of the people, 75
 Permitted by our dastard nobles, who
 Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
 And suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity
 Hath brought me to thy hearth; not out of hope 80

(Mistake me not) to save my life ; for if
 I had fear'd death, of all the men i' th' world
 I would have voided thee. But in mere spite
 To be full quit of those my banishers,
 Stand I before thee here : then, if thou hast 85
 A heart of wreak in thee, that wilt revenge
 Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those maims
 Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight,
 And make my misery serve thy turn : so use it,
 That my revengeful services may prove 90
 As benefits to thee. For I will fight Against my canker'd country, with the spleen
 Of all the under fiends. But if so be
 Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more fortunes
 Thou 'rt tir'd, then, in a word, I also am 95
 Longer to live most weary, and present
 My throat to thee and to thy ancient malice ;
 Which not to cut, would show thee but a fool,
 Since I have ever followed thee with hate,
 Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast, 100
 And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
 It be to do thee service.

AUFIDIUS. O Martius, Martius !

Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart
 A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter

Should from yond cloud speak divine things, 105
 And say 'T is true,' I'd not believe them more Than thee, all noble Martius. Let me twine
 Mine arms about that body, where against
 My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
 And scarr'd the moon with splinters: here I clip 110
 The anvil of my sword, and do contest
 As hotly, and as nobly with thy love
 As ever in ambitious strength I did
 Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
 I lov'd the maid I married; never man 115
 Sigh'd truer breath. But that I see thee here,
 Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart
 Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
 Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,
 We have a power on foot; and I had purpose 120
 Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
 Or lose mine arm for 't: thou hast beat me out
 Twelve several times, and I have nightly since
 Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:

110. scarr'd . . . splinters. This hyperbole Delius, in defense of the reading of the Folios, compares with The Winter's Tale, III, iii, 93: "the ship boring the moon with her main-mast." Malone, in defense of Rowe's 'scar'd,' quotes Richard III, V, iii, 341: "Amaze the welkin with your broken staves."

110-111. clip the anvil of my sword: embrace him who was struck by my sword as the anvil is by the hammer.

114. Know thou first. Daniel's conjecture that this should read 'Know, thou first!' i.e. 'thou foremost of men,' was adopted in previous editions of Hudson's Shakespeare.

122. out: out and out, thoroughly.

We have been down together in my sleep, 125
 Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
 And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Martius,
 Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
 From twelve to seventy, and pouring war 130
 Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
 Like a bold flood o'er-beat. O, come, go in,
 And take our friendly senators by th' hands,
 Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
 Who am prepar'd against your territories, 135
 Though not for Rome itself.

CORIOLANUS. You bless me, gods!

AUFIDIUS. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have
 The leading of thine own revenges, take
 Th' one half of my commission, and set down
 (As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st 140
 Thy country's strength and weakness) thine own ways;
 Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
 Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
 To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
 Let me commend thee first to those that shall 145
 Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
 And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
 Yet, Martius, that was much. Your hand: most welcome!

SICINIUS. Go, masters, get you home; be not dismay'd:
These are a side that would be glad to have 150

And show no sign of fear.

ish'd him. 155

2 CITIZEN. So did we all. But, come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens]

BRUTUS. I do not like this news.

Would buy this for a' lie!

153-156. "His chiefest purpose was to increase still the malice and dissension between the nobility and the commonalty . . . This made greater stir and broil between the nobility and the people than was before. For the noblemen fell out with the people because they had so unjustly banished a man of so great valour and power. . . . Then fell there out a marvellous sudden change of mind among the people, and far more strange and contrary in the nobility. For the people thought it good to repeal the condemnation and exile of Martius." — Plutarch.

SCENE VII. A camp, at a small distance from RomeEnter AUFIDIUS with his Lieutenant

AUFIDIUS. Do they still fly to th' Roman?

LIEUTENANT. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but
 Your soldiers use him as the grace fore meat,
 Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
 And you are dark'ned in this action, sir, 5
 Even by your own.

AUFIDIUS. I cannot help it now,
 Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
 Of our design. He bears himself more proudlier,
 Even to my person, than I thought he would
 When first I did embrace him: yet his nature 10
 In that's no changeling, and I must excuse
 What cannot be amended.

LIEUTENANT. Yet I wish, sir,
 (I mean for your particular) you had not
 Join'd in commission with him; but either

Hereupon his fame ran through all Italy, and every one praised him for a valiant captain." — Plutarch.

6. your own: your own soldiers.

13. for your particular: so far as you personally are concerned.

Have borne the action of yourself, or else 15
To him had left it solely.

AUFIDIUS. I understand thee well ; and be thou sure,
When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent 20
To th' vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state,
Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword, yet he hath left undone
That which shall break his neck or hazard mine, 25
Whene'er we come to our account.

LIEUTENANT. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry
Rome?

AUFIDIUS. All places yield to him ere he sits down,
And the nobility of Rome are his :
The senators and patricians love him too : 30
The tribunes are no soldiers ; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome
As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First, he was 35
A noble servant to them ; but he could not

34. The osprey was supposed to fascinate fish, making them turn on their backs and yield themselves an unresisting prey. Cf. The Two Noble Kinsmen, I, i, 138-140:

Your [Jove's] actions
Soon as they move, as ospreys do the fish,
Subdue before they touch.

Carry his honours even : whether 't was pride,
 Which out of daily fortune ever taints
 The happy man ; whether defect of judgment,
 To fail in the disposing of those chances 40
 Which he was lord of ; or whether nature,
 Not to be other than one thing, not moving
 From th' casque to th' cushion, but commanding peace
 Even with the same austerity and garb,
 As he controll'd the war. But one of these, 45
 (As he hath spices of them all, not all,
 For I dare so far free him) made him fear'd,
 So hated, and so banish'd : but he has a merit
 To choke it in the utt'rance. So our virtues

37. 't was F₃F₄ | 'was F₁F₂.39. defect F₂F₃F₄ | detect F₁.49. To choke | Tho' chokes Hammer.— virtues F₂F₃F₄ | Vertue, F₁.

37-45. pride . . . war. "Aufidius assigns three probable reasons for the miscarriage of Coriolanus ; pride, which easily follows an uninterrupted train of success ; unskilfulness to regulate the consequences of his own victories : a stubborn uniformity of nature, which could not make the proper transition from the 'casque' or 'helmet' to the 'cushion' or 'chair of civil authority' ; but acted with the same despotism in peace as in war." — Johnson.

39. happy : lucky, fortunate. Cf. Latin felix.

46. He savors of all but not in their full strength.

48-49. but he . . . utt'rance : but he is able to choke it (his banishment) while it is being proclaimed. This is added parenthetically, and is aside from the main thought. The following 'so' refers to what precedes the parenthesis.

49-53. So . . . done : thus our virtues depend on how we are estimated by our contemporaries, and power most commendable in itself finds no path to ruin so inevitable as that of a place of authority which extols its deeds. That is, let a man like Coriolanus, with his habits of military prerogative, be once advanced to a place of civil authority, and the very seat which rewards and blazons his exploits

Lie in th' interpretation of the time ; 50
 And power, unto itself most commendable,
 Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
 T' extol what it hath done.
 One fire drives out one fire ; one nail, one nail ;
 Rights by rights fouler, strengths by strengths do fail. 55
 Come, let 's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
 Thou art poor'st of all ; then shortly art thou mine.

52. evident: certain, inevitable. — chair: sella curulis, the official seat of the higher magistrates.

54. One fire drives out one fire: heat expels heat. An allusion to the old idea of curing a burn by applying heat.

55. Probably the sense of 'fail' is anticipated in the first clause and that of 'fouler' continued over the second, and the meaning will be that the better rights succumb to the worse and the nobler strengths to the meaner. See textual variants for attempts at emendation.

ACT V

SCENE I. Rome. A public place

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS and BRUTUS, the two Tribunes, with others

MENENIUS. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said
Which was sometime his general, who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me father:
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him;
A mile before his tent fall down, and knee 5
The way into his mercy: nay, if he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

COMINIUS. He would not seem to know me.

MENENIUS. Do you hear?

COMINIUS. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops 10
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,

12. to F₂F₃F₄ | too F₁.

3. In a most dear particular: with close personal affection.

5. knee: make your way upon your knees.

6. coy'd: disdained. The verb 'coy' meant originally 'render quiet,' 'calm'; then 'stroke soothingly,' 'caress' (as in A Midsummer Night's Dream, IV, i, 2); then 'affect reserve toward,' 'have an aversion for.'

Till he had forg'd himself a name o' th' fire
Of burning Rome.

MENENIUS. Why, so: you have made good work: 15
A pair of tribunes, that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap: a noble memory!

COMINIUS. I minded him how royal 't was to pardon
When it was less expected. He replied,
It was a bare petition of a state 20
To one whom they had punish'd.

MENENIUS. Very well;
Could he say less?

COMINIUS. I offered to awaken his regard
For 's private friends: his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile 25
Of noisome musty chaff: he said, 't was folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt
And still to nose th' offence.

MENENIUS. For one poor grain or two?
I am one of those: his mother, wife, his child,
And this brave fellow too, we are the grains: 30
You are the musty chaff, and you are smelt
Above the moon. We must be burnt for you.

SICINIUS. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid
In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid 's with our distress. But sure, if you 35
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

16. rack'd for Pope | wrack'd for Ff | wreck'd fair Dyce.

16-17. rack'd . . . cheap. Who will want coals when the city is burning (line 14)? — memory. As in IV, v, 72.

MENENIUS. No, I'll not meddle.

SICINIUS. Pray you go to him.

MENENIUS. What should I do?

BRUTUS. Only make trial what your love can do 40
For Rome, towards Martius.

MENENIUS. Well, and say that Martius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,

Unheard; what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot

With his unkindness? say 't be so?

SICINIUS. Yet your good will 45
Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

MENENIUS. I'll undertake 't:

I think he'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip

And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd: 50

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then

We pout upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd

These pipes and these conveyances of our blood

With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls 55

Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request,

And then I'll set upon him.

BRUTUS. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

MENENIUS. Good faith, I'll prove him, 60

47. As: which. Cf. Julius Cæsar, I, ii, 33. See Abbott, § 280.

50. taken well: approached opportunely. This speech is appropriate in a speaker who is confessedly convivial. Cf. II, i, 45-47.

Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success.

[Exit]

COMINIUS. He 'll never hear him.

SICINIUS. Not?

COMINIUS. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him; 65
'T was very faintly he said 'Rise': dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would do,
He sent in writing after me: what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain, 70
Unless his noble mother, and his wife,
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country: therefore let 's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exeunt]

61. Speed: fare. Cf. The Merchant of Venice, V, i, 115.

63. sit in gold. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, III, vi, 4-5: "Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold Were publicly enthron'd." "The ambassadors that were sent were Martius' familiar friends and acquaintance, who looked at the least for a courteous welcome of him, as of their familiar friend and kinsman. Howbeit they found nothing less, for at their coming they were brought through the camp to the place where he was set in his chair of state, with a marvellous and an unspeakable majesty, having the chiefest men of the Volsces about him." — Plutarch.

64-65. his . . . pity: the wrong done him locked up his pity.

67-69. What . . . conditions: what he would grant was stated in the written terms for surrender; in the other points he bound the Romans to yield to his conditions. 'What he would not' is grammatically the object of 'bound.'

SCENE II. Entrance to the Volscian camp before Rome
Two Watch on guard

Enter to them, MENENIUS

1 WATCH. Stay : whence are you ?

2 WATCH. Stand, and go back.

MENENIUS. You guard like men ; 't is well. But by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come
 To speak with Coriolanus.

1 WATCH. From whence ?

MENENIUS. From Rome.

1 WATCH. You may not pass, you must return : our general 5

Will no more hear from thence.

2 WATCH. You 'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before

You 'll speak with Coriolanus.

MENENIUS. Good my friends,

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,

And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks 10

My name hath touch'd your ears : it is Menenius.

1 WATCH. Be it so ; go back : the virtue of your name
 Is not here passable.

MENENIUS. I tell thee, fellow,
 Thy general is my lover: I have been
 The book of his good acts, whence men have read 15
 His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified;
 For I have ever verified my friends
 (Of whom he 's chief) with all the size that verity
 Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
 Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground 20
 I have tumbled past the throw, and in his praise
 Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Therefore, fellow,
 I must have leave to pass.

1 WATCH. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Therefore go back. 27

MENENIUS. Prithee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 WATCH. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, must say you cannot pass. Therefore go back. 32

MENENIUS. Has he din'd, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 WATCH. You are a Roman, are you? 35

16. haply Hanmer | happely F₁F₂ | happily F₃F₄.

17. verified: stood up for, supported. Cf. King John, II, i, 277.

20. subtle: deceptive, treacherously smooth. Steevens quotes Ben Jonson's Chloridia: "Upon Tityus' breast . . . counted the subtlest bowling-ground in all Tartarus."

21. tumbled past the throw: overshot the mark.

22. stamp'd the leasing: given currency to untruth.

29. factionary on: taking your stand on the side of.

MENENIUS. I am, as thy general is.

I WATCH. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have push'd out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceiv'd: therefore back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon. 47

MENENIUS. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

I WATCH. Come, my captain knows you not. 50

MENENIUS. I mean, thy general.

I WATCH. My general cares not for you. Back, I say, go; lest I let forth your half-pint of blood. Back, that's the utmost of your having; back!

MENENIUS. Nay, but, fellow, fellow — 55

Enter CORIOLANUS with AUFIDIUS

perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. [To CORIOLANUS] The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O my son, my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee: but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here, this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee. 73

CORIOLANUS. Away!

MENENIUS. How? away? 75

CORIOLANUS. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs
Are servanted to others: though I owe

78-79. my remission . . . breasts: any remission that I may make depends on the will of the Volscians.

79-81. That . . . much: oblivious ingratitude shall kill our old friendship rather than pity shall give any sign how strong it was.

Than pity note how much. Therefore be gone.
 Mine ears against your suits are stronger than
 Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved thee,
 Take this along ; I writ it for thy sake, [Gives a letter]
 And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius, 85
 I will not hear thee speak. This man, Aufidius,
 Was my belov'd in Rome : yet thou behold'st.

AUFIDIUS. You keep a constant temper.

1 WATCH. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 WATCH. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power : you know the way home again. 91

1 WATCH. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back ?

2 WATCH. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon ?

MENENIUS. I neither care for th' world, nor your general : for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another : let your general do his worst. For you, age ! I say to you, as I was said to, Away ! [Exit] 100

Set down our host. My partner in this action,
You must report to th' Volscian lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

AUFIDIUS. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp'd your ears against 5
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

CORIOLANUS. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father, 10
Nay, godded me indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love I have,
Though I show'd sourly to him, once more offer'd
The first conditions, which they did refuse
And cannot now accept; to grace him only 15
That thought he could do more, a very little
I have yielded to. Fresh embassies and suits,

Now was Martius set then in his chair of state, with all the honours of a general, and when he had spied the women coming afar off, he marvelled what the matter meant: but afterwards knowing his wife which came foremost, he determined at the first to persist in his obstinate and inflexible rancour. But overcome in the end with natural affection, and being altogether altered to see them, his heart would not serve him to tarry their coming to his chair, but coming down in haste he went to meet them, and first he kissed his mother, and embraced her a pretty while, then his wife and little children." — Plutarch.

30. Olympus. A mountain in Thessaly, on which dwelt the gods of Greek mythology. Cf. line 46 and IV, ii, 53, where Volumnia likens herself to Juno.

 Great nature cries 'Deny not.' Let the Volsces
 Plough Rome, and harrow Italy : I 'll never
 Be such a gosling to obey instinct ; but stand 35

 And knew no other kin.

VIRGILIA. My lord and husband !

CORIOLANUS. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

VIRGILIA. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd,
 Makes you think so.

CORIOLANUS. Like a dull actor now, 40
 I have forgot my part, and I am out,
 Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
 Forgive my tyranny ; but do not say
 For that, 'Forgive our Romans.' O, a kiss
 Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge ! 45
 Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
 I carried from thee, dear ; and my true lip

 Show duty, as mistaken all this while 55
 Between the child and parent. [Kneels]

CORIOLANUS. What's this?
 Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
 Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
 Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
 Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun, 60
 Murd'ring impossibility, to make
 What cannot be, slight work.

VOLUMNIA. Thou art my warrior;
 I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

 did such notable service to the Romans. . . . His sister Valeria was greatly honoured and revered among all the Romans: and did so modestly and wisely behave herself, that she did not shame nor dishonour the house she came of."—Plutarch, Life of Publicola.

 the moon, is the Roman ideal of modesty. Cf. I, i, 252; II, i, 89.

VOLUMNIA. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by th' interpretation of full time
May show like all yourself.

CORIOLANUS. The god of soldiers, 70
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou mayst prove
To shame invulnerable, and stick i' th' wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

VOLUMNIA. Your knee, sirrah. 75

CORIOLANUS. That 's my brave boy!

VOLUMNIA. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

CORIOLANUS. I beseech you, peace :
Or, if you 'ld ask, remember this before :
The thing I have forsworn to grant may never 80
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics : tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural : desire not
T' allay my rages and revenges with 85
Your colder reasons.

VOLUMNIA. O, no more, no more !
You have said you will not grant us any thing ;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already : yet we will ask ;

73. stick F₁ | strike F₂F₃F₄.

68. This. Volumnia here points to young Martius.

74. sea-mark : beacon. Cf. Othello, V, ii, 268. — flaw : gust.

80-81. What I have sworn not to grant cannot be held by you as personal refusals.

That, if you fail in our request, the blame
 May hang upon your hardness: therefore hear us. 90

CORIOLANUS. Aufidius, and you Volsces, mark; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private. Your request?

VOLUMNIA. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment
 And state of bodies would bewray what life 95

92. "After he had thus lovingly received them, and perceiving that his mother Volumnia would begin to speak to him, he called the chiefest of the council of the Volsces to hear what she would say. Then she spake in this sort: 'If we held our peace, my son, and determined not to speak, the state of our poor bodies, and present sight of our raiment, would easily bewray to thee what life we have led at home, since thy exile and abode abroad; but think now with thyself, how much more unfortunately ['unfortunate' in the edition of 1612] than all the women living, we are come hither, considering that the sight which should be most pleasant to all other to behold, spiteful fortune had made most fearful to us: making myself to see my son, and my daughter here her husband, besieging the walls of his native country: so as that which is the only comfort to all other in their adversity and misery, to pray unto the gods and to call to them for aid, is the only thing which plungeth us into most deep perplexity. For we cannot, alas! together pray both for victory to our country and for safety of thy life also: but a world of grievous curses, yea, more than any mortal enemy can heap upon us, are forcibly wrapt up in our prayers. For the bitter sop of most hard choice is offered thy wife and children, to forego one of the two: either to lose the person of thyself, or the nurse of their native country. For myself, my son, I am determined not to tarry till fortune, in my lifetime, do make an end of this war. For if I cannot persuade thee, rather to do good unto both parties than to overthrow and destroy the one, preferring love and nature before the malice and calamity of wars, thou shalt see, my son, and trust unto it, thou shalt no sooner march forward to assault thy country, but thy foot shall tread upon thy mother's womb, that brought thee first into this world.'" — Plutarch.

We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself
 How more unfortunate than all living women
 Are we come hither; since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
 Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow, 100
 Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
 The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
 His country's bowels out; and to poor we Thine enmity's most capital: thou barr'st us
 Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort 105
 That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
 Alas, how can we for our country pray,
 Whereto we are bound, together with thy victory,
 Whereto we are bound? alack, or we must lose
 The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person, 110
 Our comfort in the country. We must find
 An evident calamity, though we had
 Our wish, which side should win. For either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
 With manacles through our streets, or else 115
 Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
 And bear the palm for having bravely shed
 Thy wife and children's blood: for myself, son,
 I purpose not to wait on fortune till
 These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee 120
 Rather to show a noble grace to both parts
 Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner

March to assault thy country than to tread
 (Trust to 't, thou shalt not) on thy mother's womb,
 That brought thee to this world.

VIRGILIA. Ay, and mine, 125
 That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
 Living to time.

BOY. A shall not tread on me :
 I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

CORIOLANUS. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
 Requires nor child nor woman's face to see : 130
 I have sat too long. [Rising]

VOLUMNIA. Nay, go not from us thus :
 If it were so that our request did tend
 To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
 The Volsces whom you serve, you might condemn us,
 As poisonous of your honour. No ; our suit 135
 Is that you reconcile them : while the Volsces
 May say ' This mercy we have show'd,' the Romans,
 ' This we receiv'd,' and each in either side
 Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, ' Be blest
 For making up this peace ! ' Thou know'st, great son, 140
 The end of war's uncertain, but this certain,
 That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
 Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name
 Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses ;
 Whose chronicle thus writ : ' The man was noble, 145
 But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
 Destroy'd his country, and his name remains

 To imitate the graces of the gods ; 150
 To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' th' air,
 And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
 That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak ?
 Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
 Still to remember wrongs ? Daughter, speak you : 155
 He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou, boy :
 Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
 Than can our reasons. There's no man in the world
 More bound to 's mother, yet here he lets me prate
 Like one i' th' stocks. Thou hast never in thy life 160
 Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy ;
 When she, poor hen, fond of no second brood,
 Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
 Loaden with honour. Say my request's unjust,
 And spurn me back : but if it be not so, 165

149-153. The general idea is of Omnipotence able to rend the universe in pieces, yet satisfied to charge its thunder-engines with a bolt that splits only an oak. "For the noblest and most amiable thing . . . is power mixed with gentleness, the reposing, self-restraining attitude of strength. These are 'the fine strains of honour,' these are 'the graces of the gods.'"—J. R. Seeley. Cf. V, i, 18. The idea was a favorite one with Shakespeare. That thou restrain'st from me the duty which
 To a mother's part belongs. He turns away :
 Down, ladies ; let us shame him with our knees.
 To his surname Coriolanus longs more pride 170
 Than pity to our prayers. Down : an end ;
 This is the last. So we will home to Rome,
 And die among our neighbours. Nay, behold 's ;
 This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
 But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship, 175
 Does reason our petition with more strength
 Than thou hast to deny 't. Come, let us go :
 This fellow had a Volscian to his mother ;
 His wife is in Corioles, and his child
 Like him by chance. Yet give us our dispatch : 180
 I am hush'd until our city be afire,
 And then I'll speak a little. [He holds her by the hand, silent]

CORIOLANUS. O mother, mother !
 What have you done ? Behold, the heavens do ope,
 The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
 They laugh at. O my mother, mother ! O ! 185
 You have won a happy victory to Rome ;
 But, for your son, believe it, O, believe it,
 Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
 If not most mortal to him. But, let it come :

186-189. "And holding her hard by the right hand, 'Oh mother,' he said, 'you have won a happy victory for your country, but mortal and unhappy for your son: for I see myself vanquished by you alone.'" — Plutarch.

I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,
Were you in my stead, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?

AUFIDIUS. I was mov'd withal.

CORIOLANUS. I dare be sworn you were :
And, sir, it is no little thing to make 195
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me : for my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you ; and pray you,
Stand to me in this cause. O mother ! wife !

AUFIDIUS. [Aside] I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour 200

At difference in thee : out of that I'll work
Myself a former fortune.

CORIOLANUS. Ay, by and by ;

203. drink together. A token of peace. Cf. 2 Henry IV, IV, ii, 62–65:

To have a temple built you : all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace.

SICINIUS. Why, what of that?

MENENIUS. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in 't: our throats are sentenc'd, and stay upon execution.

SICINIUS. Is 't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man? 10

MENENIUS. There is differency between a grub and a

Fortuna Muliebris, is said to have stood on the Via Latina, at the fourth milestone, where Coriolanus met his mother.

butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Martius is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

SICINIUS. He lov'd his mother dearly. 15

MENENIUS. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corslet with his eye, talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finish'd with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

SICINIUS. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly. 25

MENENIUS. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is long of you.

SICINIUS. The gods be good unto us! 30

MENENIUS. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banish'd him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

SICINIUS. What's the news?

2 MESSENGER. Good news, good news! the ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Martius gone: 40
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

SICINIUS. Friend,
Art thou certain this is true? is't most certain?

2 MESSENGER. As certain as I know the sun is fire:
Where have you lurk'd that you make doubt of it? 45
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,
As the recomforted through th' gates. Why, hark you!

[Trumpets; hautboys; drums beat; all together]

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Hark you! [A shout within]

MENENIUS. This is good news: 50
I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full: of tribunes such as you,
A sea and land full: you have pray'd well to-day:
This morning, for ten thousand of your throats, 55
I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy!

[Sound still, with the shouts]

50. Make the sun dance. An allusion to the popular belief that the sun danced on Easter Day.

SICINIUS. First, the gods bless you for your tidings ; next,
Accept my thankfulness.

2 MESSENGER. Sir, we have all
Great cause to give great thanks.

SICINIUS. They are near the city ?

2 MESSENGER. Almost at point to enter.

SICINIUS. We 'll meet them,
And help the joy. [Exeunt] 61

AUFIDIUS.

Sir, I cannot tell :

15

We must proceed as we do find the people.

3 CONSPIRATOR. The people will remain uncertain whilst 'Twi'xt you there's difference ; but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heir of all.

AUFIDIUS.

I know it,

And my pretext to strike at him admits

20

A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine honour for his truth : who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends ; and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 CONSPIRATOR. Sir, his stoutness
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping —

AUFIDIUS.

That I would have spoke of :

Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth ;
Presented to my knife his throat : I took him,
Made him joint-servant with me, gave him way
In all his own desires, nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men, serv'd his designments
In mine own person, help to reap the fame
Which he did end all his ; and took some pride

I CONSPIRATOR. So he did, my lord :
The army marvell'd at it, and in the last,
When he had carried Rome and that we look'd
For no less spoil than glory —

AUFIDIUS. There was it :
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him. 45
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action ; therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But hark ! 49

I CONSPIRATOR. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home ; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury
His reasons with his body.

AUFIDIUS. Say no more :
Here come the lords. 60

Enter the Lords of the city

ALL THE LORDS. You are most welcome home.

AUFIDIUS. I have not deserv'd it.
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perused
What I have written to you ?

LORDS. We have.

I LORD. And grieve to hear 't :

There was a yielding : this admits no excuse.

AUFIDIUS. Ay, traitor, Martius.

CORIOLANUS. Martius ?

AUFIDIUS. Insolent villain ! 130

ALL CONSPIRATORS. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him !

[Both the Conspirators draw, and kill CORIOLANUS, who falls. AUFIDIUS stands on him]

LORDS. Hold, hold, hold, hold !

116. Flutter'd F₃F₄ | Flatter'd F₁F₂.

125-126. folds in . . . earth : extends beyond and around the world.

127. judicious : judicial, impartial. Cf. King Lear, III, iv, 76.

131. " Those that were of the conspiracy began to cry out that he was not to be heard, and that they would not suffer a traitor to usurp tyrannical power over the tribe of the Volsces, who would not yield up his state and authority. And in saying these words, they all fell upon him, and killed him in the market-place, none of the people once offering to rescue him." — Plutarch.

AUFIDIUS. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 LORD.

O Tullus!

2 LORD. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 LORD. Tread not upon him. Masters all, be quiet;

Put up your swords.

135

AUFIDIUS. My lords, when you shall know (as in this rage, Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours To call me to your senate, I'll deliver 140
Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 LORD.

Bear from hence his body,

And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded

As the most noble corse that ever herald

Did follow to his urn.

2 LORD.

His own impatience

145

Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame:

Let's make the best of it.

AUFIDIUS.

My rage is gone,

And I am struck with sorrow. Take him up:

Help, three o' th' chiefest soldiers; I'll be one.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:

150

Trail your steel pikes. Though in this city he

138. owe you: possess for you, have in reserve for you. This meaning survives in the expression 'owe a grudge.'

142-145. Bear . . . his urn. "Howbeit it is a clear case, that this murder was not generally consented unto of the most part of the Volsces: for men came out of all parts to honour his body, and did honourably bury him; setting out his tomb with great store of armour and spoils, as the tomb of a worthy person and great captain."—Plutarch.

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury,
Yet he shall have a noble memory.

Assist. [*Exeunt, bearing the body of CORIOLANUS. A dead
march sounded*] 155

155. [Exeunt . . . CORIOLANUS . . .] Exeunt . . . Martius . . . Ff.

155. "Now Martius being dead, the whole state of the Volsces heartily wished him alive again. For, first of all, they fell out with the Æques (who were their friends and confederates) touching pre-eminence and place: and this quarrel grew on so far between them, that frays and murders fell out upon it one with another. After that, the Romans overcame them in battle, in which Tullus was slain in the field, and the flower of all their force was put to the sword: so that they were compelled to accept most shameful conditions of peace, in yielding themselves subject unto the conquerors, and promising to be obedient at their commandment." — Plutarch.
